Vital Bills Endangered By Filibuster, Leaders Say

Rent Control, ECA Involved, With Odds Favoring Talkative Southern Senators

By David McConnell
NYHT News Service

Administration leaders were frank to admit yesterday that it is any one's guess whether they will be able to break the week-old filibuster of Southern Senators without jeopardizing the passage of other important Administration measures.

With the odds currently favoring the talkative Dixie Senators, Administration leaders went forward with plans to hold the Senate in night sessions this week in an attempt to wear down the filibuster.

Many top Democrats, while publicly proclaiming their determination to break the extensive talkfest, privately were expressing concern over the fate of other vital portions of their party's campaign commitments.

Rent Control Nears Expiration

They added the situation up thus:

1. When the civil rights program is balanced against other major items in the Democrats' platform it is not weighty enough to tip the scales in favor of an all-out, lengthy fight.

2. If the Democrats let rent control expire on March 31 because of the filibuster they will be deluged by a storm of protests, especially from the large metropolitan centers where housing remains a major problem. Although the demands for action on President Truman's strong civil rights program come in a large part from the large cities, Democrats feel the financial pinch of a sudden-raising of rents would result in a storm of protests from the same areas.

3. The Economic Cooperation Administration's appropriation of $5,050,000,000 last year expires on April 3 and many Senators feel any delay in renewing the European aid commitments might provide explosive fuel for the Russians in the present cold war. As of last Thursday the Administration had committed all but $274,582,000 of its current appropriation. ECA currently is requesting $5,580,000,000 to carry it from April 3 through June 30, 1950.

Press for Taft Act Repeal

The Democrats' predicament is further darkened by increasing pressure from the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations for a down payment, in the form of action, on repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law, on what the unions feel is a campaign debt. Labor also wants passage of legislation increasing the current minimum wage of 40 cents to $1 an hour. An Administration bill providing for a 75-cent minimum is under consideration.

Suspect Flees As Lynchers Match Coins

Opelousas, La., March 6 (U.P.).—A 25-year-old Negro, kidnaped from the St. Landry Parish Prison and on the verge of being lynched, jumped into the Atchafalaya River today and escaped while the leaders of a mob matched coins to see who would be his executioner.

The victim is Edward Honeycutt, who has confessed raping a white woman three months ago. A fisherman dragged Honeycutt from the river and he was taken to the "mob proof" prison at Baton Rouge. Authorities said Honeycutt was not harmed, but they refused to let anyone talk to him.

Sheriff Martin Guilbeau said there were two "and maybe three" automobiles filled with men in the mob that abducted Honeycutt. Guilbeau and a posse were so close on their heels that the kidnapers had to flee without looking for Honeycutt when he escaped.

An elderly jailer was tricked at midnight Saturday into letting three men snatch Honeycutt from the steel-and-stone jail on the top floor of the three-and-a-half story courthouse building.

Three men came up in an elevator. Two of them complained to Jailer Henry Landry that their companion was drunk and making a nuisance of himself. They said they wanted him locked up.

When Landry opened the steel door from the elevator entrance, one of the men smashed him across the arm with a pistol and another grabbed his keys.

By the time help was mustered, the men had taken Honeycutt away.

The posse chased the mob to a bridge across the Atchafalaya River near Krotz Springs.

Honeycutt was dumped on the low levee and three members of the mob started matching coins to see which one would shoot him. As they matched and argued, Honeycutt dived into the river, 120 yards wide at that point.

Honeycutt clung to willows along the bank for four hours until the fisherman helped him out.

Baby Dies Of Burns in Home Fire

One-year-old Joseph Gaither died in Providence Hospital last night of burns suffered earlier in a fire which critically seared four other children in a two-story brick house at 313 O st sw.

Three other youngsters fled unharmed from flames in a second-floor bedroom. Firemen believed an oil stove explosion started the fire about 3 p. m.

The five injured, from 1 to 3 years old, were found cowering under beds in the room by Lieut. George Floherty of No. 7 Engine Co. and Pvt. Henry Lange of No. 10 Truck Co., who burst through the flames to carry them out.

Adult members of the two families that occupy the dwelling heard the children's screams, but were prevented from reaching them by the flames.

Admitted to Providence Hospital with first, second and third-degree burns were:

Sylvester Gaither, 2, brother of Joseph, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Gaither; and Donald and Dolores Middleton, 16-month-old twin children of Mrs. Alma Middleton.

Less seriously injured was Paulette Middleton, 3, who was taken to Children's Hospital.

The children were taking naps at the time of the fire. The three that escaped unharmed were identified by members of the families as: Douglas, 5, and Gloria Jean Gaither, 8, and Ella Mae Middleton, 3.

Truman Lands In Florida, Asks About Molotov

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Key West, March 6.—President Truman turned the tables on White House reporters today and interviewed them when they landed here at Boca Chica Naval Air Base.

By careful mismanagement, reported to have been inspired by the President himself, his airplane landed five minutes before the Eastern Airlines Constellation carrying the newsmen accompanying him on his 13-day vacation here. Ordinarily the press airplane takes off a few minutes after the President's "Independence" and lands a few minutes before.

Today the Independence settled to the ground a full five minutes before the Constellation arrived. Mr. Truman borrowed a fountain pen, pulled a wad of paper from his pocket and walked to the big Constellation as it taxied to a standstill. When reporters began walking down the ramp he was waiting for them.

"What about Molotov?" he asked.

"No comment," they said.

"Well," Mr. Truman remarked, holding his pen over the wad of paper, "I want to interview the president of the White House Correspondents Association."

That reporter, Robert G. Nixon of International News Service, was late in descending the ramp. Mr. Truman waited for him, demanding all the while that he be given an interview.

When Nixon finally reached the ground, Truman said again: "What about Molotov?"

Nixon hesitated a moment and

Senators Ask Cost Data on Atlantic Pact

George Also Calls For Detailed Facts On European Aid Spending Program

NYHT News Service

Senate ratification of the North Atlantic pact may run into trouble unless the State Department furnishes estimates of the agreement's initial cost to the United States, members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee warned yesterday.

Cost-conscious Senators announced their unwillingness to give blank check approval to the pact. In virtually the same breath they called for a more detailed spelling out of the spending plans of the European Cooperation Administration during the 15-month period beginning in April. ECA has asked for $5,580,000,000 for European aid for the period.

Senator George (D., Ga.) and Senator Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) served notice yesterday that they will demand that substantial estimates of the pact's cost be publicized before they will support its ratification. They emphasized that the sums the United States may be called on to spend arming western Europe must be submitted during the period the Senate is considering the alliance.

George Insists on Answers

Both are members of the Foreign Relations Committee through which the pact must clear for debate on its ratification in the Senate.

Senator George explained that it would be impossible to vote for the legislation unless Senators have the answers to the questions of how much the pact and kindred legislation to supplement it will cost the United States.

George, who also favors slicing part of ECA's request for European aid spending, said that the best estimates he has been able to obtain on the cost of arming members of the North Atlantic Pact run between $1,000,000,000 and $1,500,000,000.

Hickenlooper asserted that both the Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate itself must "understand completely" the financial obligations of the alliance as well as details of the pact.

Connally Declines Comment

The two ranking Republican and Democratic Party members of the committee withheld comment. Senator Connally (D., Tex.) said he was not ready to discuss the Atlantic Pact, although he is understood to agree with Senator George that the State Department will have to bring in detailed cost estimates before either committee can approve the alliance or the Senate can act on ratification.

On the Republican side, Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, ranking minority party committee member, also declined comment.

The Foreign Relations Committee meanwhile will continue in executive session today, discussing the ECA proposed legislation. Both George and Hickenlooper said they were hopeful the organization would be prepared to submit a breakdown of spending plans at today's session.

Soviet Recovery Team Barred

Clay Rejects Reds' Charge U. S. Delays Restitution Work

Berlin, March 6 (U.P.).—Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American military commander, today rejected as "without foundation" Russian charges that the United States is delaying delivery and deliberately damaging Soviet property looted by the Nazis.

The charges were contained in a letter to Clay from Soviet Military Gov. Marshal Vassily D. Sokolovsky, who demanded that a nine-man Russian restitution team be admitted to the United States zone to recover property, including art treasures.

Clay's comment was succinct: "This is a typical Soviet letter without foundation and will be answered in due course."

Earlier O. R. McJunkins, United States reparations and restitutions chief, said any tardiness in returning Russian property was the fault of the Russians.

"There are approximately 40 freight cars of Soviet properties sitting at Bremen now," he said, "waiting for the Russians to get around to sending a ship for them."

For almost 18 months the Russians have "watched the ships go by" as other nations carried home the machinery and art objects looted by the Nazis, he said.

In view of Clay's statement, it seems certain he will turn down the Soviet demand for admission of a restitution mission.

In his letter, Sokolovsky also took occasion to reject a recent American proposal that consulates be established on a mutual basis in both the East and West zones. The United States suggested that consulates could handle such problems as restitution of properties.

Sokolovsky said the Russian military government could not accept such a proposal because by so doing it would recognize the split of Germany and the establishment of a western German state.

Chinese Fear Resumption Of Fighting

10,000 Red Troops Reported Moving Into Yangtze Area

Nanking, March 6 (U.P.).—The Communists suddenly increased their pressure on the Yangtze River today and resumption of large-scale fighting was feared even as the Nationalists and Communists prepared to meet at a peace conference.

Government troops were rushed to the river defense line in the face of reports that Communist Gen. Chen Yi had moved 10,000 additional men into the area across the Yangtze from Chinkiang, 50 miles east of Nanking.

Gen. Tang En-po, commander of the Shanghai-Nanking-Hankow area, reportedly rushed a Nationalist army of 15,000 men to the banks of the Yangtze while naval forces increased their patrol activity in fear of a Communist crossing attempt.

Heavy Communist troop movements were reported to the north, and the Chinese press said two columns of Red Gen. Lin Piao's troops, which overran Manchuria and North China, were moving southward along the Peiping-Hankow Railway.

The top military leaders of Nationalist China, meanwhile, were discussing plans for complete reorganization of the army, the army newspaper Peace Daily reported.

The report came as the Com-

Student Caught With Rare Book To Be Punished

Los Angeles, March 6 (AP).—Librarian L. C. Powell of UCLA said today he would recommend "severe" disciplinary action against a young scholar accused of attempting to steal one of the most valuable books in the world, the Bay Psalm Book.

Charles J. Glenn, 27, a UCLA post-graduate student of Portland, Oreg., was caught Friday night, police said, climbing out of the library window with the book—insured for $100,000—in his hand. Glenn claimed he intended to "borrow" the book as part of a secret fraternity initiation.

Foster, Dennis Deny 'Traitor' Accusation

Communists Answer Truman Charge, Cite Remark About 'S. O. B.'

New York, March 6 (U.P.).—William Z. Foster, national chairman of the Communist Party, and Eugene Dennis, general secretary, said today that President Truman distorted their views when he referred to them as "traitors" at a news conference last week.

The Communist leaders replied to Mr. Truman's remark in an open letter to the President. They declared that it never should be considered treasonable for any person to oppose war and that they always have had the best interests of the United States at heart.

"On our part, we Communists will defend in the future as in the past the highest interests of our country," they wrote. "We will defend in the future as in the past our people from all enemies, within and without."

Foster and Dennis are among 12 Communist leaders who have been indicted and are now facing trial here for conspiring to advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by violence. They were quoted as saying on March 2 that they would not defend their country in the event of a Communist invasion, and that prompted Mr. Truman to call them "traitors."

"Is the advocacy of peace treason?" their letter began.

"Is the moral climate of our country such that an appeal to reason becomes the basis for the charge of treason?

"So it would appear. One day you called a writer an S. O. B. because he dared criticize one of your aides for accepting a medal from the Fascist Peron. Another day you termed traitors men who believe that war is not inevitable and that two social systems can cooperate in the interests of world peace—and who work towards that end.

"In denouncing our plea for peace you are, of course, aware that you distorted our views," Foster and Dennis wrote. "You twisted the question originally asked and implied that we Communists had discussed an attack by the Soviet Union upon our nation.

"We, of course, did not discuss the fantastic impossibility of such an attack upon our country, an attack which the New York Times

New Drive Is Expected To Affect Many Offices

Secrets Theft Case Of G-Girl, Russian To Be Presented to Grand Jury Today

By Seymour Freidin

New York, March 6 (NYHT). More suspects in the theft of United States security documents—a "fair number of Government employes"—are expected to be rounded up shortly, it was learned tonight.

These suspects, whose identities were not further disclosed, have been spotted for activity similar to that charged against the Soviet engineer employed by the United Nations and the New York girl working for the Department of Justice in Washington. The two were picked up in lower Manhattan Friday night and are still in detention cells waiting for bail to be posted.

[The Department of Justice announced that their case would be presented to a New York grand jury at 11 a. m. Monday. The Associated Press said the two principals had been served with subpenas to appear before the grand jury.]

The report on additional arrests drew a blank from the Department of Justice and the FBI, which preferred to keep mum on the subject.

The information, which said, too, that new arrests may show the "extent" to which many Government agencies have been riddled by personnel supplying the Soviet Union with material, was believed to be substantially correct by Senator Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.).

Senator Mundt, a former member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, said it "is unquestionably true" that espionage systems "run through many of our Government agencies."

Concerning the arrest of Miss Judith Coplon, 27-year-old Department of Justice employe, and Valentine Gubitchev, the Soviet engineer, Senator Mundt said he believed they were "just a couple of the tentacles of existing spy rings inside the Government."

The arrests of Miss Coplon and 32-year-old Gubitchev also produced these developments:

Demands from House and Senate leaders for a tougher course of handling aliens entering the country from iron curtain nations via United Nations. There was criticism of the State Department for supposed leniency to Russian and Soviet satellite diplomats that is not accorded American diplomats.

A spokesman for the United States delegation to the United Nations thought that Gubitchev would not find the Soviet Union rushing to provide his $100,000 bail. The Soviet Embassy's attitude is that Gubitchev's arrest is illegal and Ambasador S. Panyu-

Travelers Report Armed Rebellion In Nicaragua

San Salvador, El Salvador, March 6 (AP).—The newspaper Tribune Libre reported today that an armed rebellion had broken out in Nicaragua.

The newspaper quoted several persons recently arrived from the Central American country as saying Julio Olivares, former member of the national guard, was leading the revolt. He was said to have offered a reward of 10,000 cordobas (about $2000) for the head of War Minister Anastasio Somoza, Nicaraguan "strong man." This was an answer to a 1000-cordoba reward by Somoza for the capure, dead or alive, of Olivares.

(The Nicaraguan government denied reports last week of an uprising in the country.)

The travelers said Olivares' men have had several skirmishes with government troops.

Asuncion, Paraguay, March 6 (U.P.).—An official announcement said today there had been no disturbance in Paraguay as reported abroad.

The announcement said Asuncion was "completely normal" and that the night curfew had been lifted yesterday. Mardi Gras [illegible] will be held tonight and sporting events were held on schedule, the announcement said.

Heart Attack Fatal

Sen. Broughton Succumbs Here On Eve of Filibuster Speech

Senator J. Melville Broughton (D., N. C.), former North Carolina governor, died of a heart attack yesterday in Bethesda Naval Hospital.

Senator Broughton was stricken at his home at the Wardman Park Hotel in the early morning. He was taken to the hospital at 8 a. m. and died 45 minutes later. His wife, the former Alice H. Willson, was with him when he died.

Mrs. Broughton told a reporter that Broughton had been told by doctors that he had a rheumatic heart condition. She added that he never really recovered from a virus infection.

The North Carolina Senator had just begun his first full term in the Senate, and had presided over the Senate for two and a half hours on Friday. This was one of the longest periods a freshman has wielded the gavel for years.

A member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, he had been slated to make his maiden speech today on the Southern filibuster issue.

The Senate is expected to recess as soon as it meets today out of respect to Senator Broughton. Vice President Alben W. Barkley will name a delegation of Senators to attend the North Carolina legislator's funeral Tuesday.

In New River, N. C., Gov. Kerr Scott said a successor to Senator Broughton will not be appointed immediately.

The Governor said he will probably wait until the Legislature adjourns and that date is not known exactly. Political observers think it will be late this month or early in April.

Hayes Addresses Liberals

Machinist Strives for Unity In Politics of Rival Unions

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

An up-and-coming labor leader is quietly sparking a drive for political cooperation among rival unions in the face of growing congressional resistance to the Administration's Fair Deal legislative program.

Al Hayes, vice president of the International Association of Machinists, an independent union with some three-quarters of a million members, has called on the AFL, CIO, and other union groups to quit kidding themselves about their political strength and start working together.

In a closed session talk before the Trade Union Council of the Liberal Party in New York last week, Hayes declared that the "flimsy" and disunited political auxiliaries of the major labor unions were really no match for the "reactionaries" who opposed such legislation as the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

To meet the political realities of today, Hayes told the trade unionists, the union political affiliates "must organize themselves into a unified political organization."

Hayes—slated to be elected president of the powerful machinists' union next month—initiated his campaign for political cooperation and unity among the unions at a time when the Fair Deal program—backed by President Truman and organized labor—appeared to be in danger of bogging down in Congress.

World Pattern May Change

Vast Increase of Latin Trade With Europe Is Under Study

Geneva, Switzerland, March 6 (AP).—United Nations economic experts are considering a vast project for increasing trade between Europe and Latin America, it was learned today.

The project is expected to be discussed at the Havana conference of the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America next month. It provides for shipment of a wide range of Latin American raw materials to Europe, after the end of the European Recovery Program, in exchange for European machinery and equipment.

If adopted, the project might result in fundamental changes of the world's trade pattern, with European countries drawing raw materials from previously untapped resources and possibly eventually rivaling the United States as principal supplier of machinery and equipment for Latin America.

Details are not likely to be worked out until after the principle has been approved by both the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Latin America, both regional organizations of the U. N.

The outline of the trade project was based on the principle of a similar project currently being prepared by the Economic Commission for Europe. The latter calls for increasing trade between the industrial nations of western Europe and the mainly agricultural nations of Communist eastern Europe.

This principle was unanimously approved at a recent conference here of the United States and 24 Communist and non-Communist European countries.

Strikes Held Illegal If for Closed Shop

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday announced a unanimous ruling that a strike seeking to obtain a closed shop clause is illegal.

It invoked for the first time a "John L. Lewis provision" in the Taft-Hartley law in finding that the Amalgamated Meat Cutters (AFL) had violated the act by a work stoppage in Los Angeles stores of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co.

The union argued that it had not engaged in a strike after November 3, 1947, but that its 45 members merely refused to work because the contract had expired. The union said no strike call was issued and no strike benefits were paid.

The board pointed out that the Taft-Hartley law defines a strike as any "concerted stoppage of work by employes, including a stoppage by reason of the expiration of a collective bargaining agreement." That provision was aimed originally at the "no contract no work" policy of the United Mine Workers headed by Lewis but it was never used against Lewis.

"A strike call may be given in forthright fashion or informally in a manner which is understood by the initiated," the board said. It cited Judge T. Alan Goldsborough's ruling in the United Mine Workers' pension strike that a walkout may be called by "a wink or a nod."

This was the first time that a Federal administrative agency had ruled on the "no contract no work" issue.

"A strike," the board said, "may be as effectively signalled by a simple statement that an employer has refused to sign a collective bargaining contract when the union policy is 'no contract no work' as by a direct strike call from the union leadership to the union members on the failure to reach agreement on a new contract."

The board ordered the international and Local 421 of the Meat Cutters' Union to stop attempting to force the A. & P. stores to sign a closed shop agreement in violation of the Taft-Hartley Law and to bargain in good faith.

The Taft-Hartley Law prohibits the closed shop and permits the union shop only after a labor relations board election to determine whether employes want it.

Wheat Plan Offered for 'Backward'

TOM CAMPBELL, . . .wheat king

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Tom Campbell, the Montana wheat king, has presented President Truman with a plan for immediate and practical application of the latter's "bold new program" for technological aid to the world's backward areas.

The plan, already tacitly approved by the French government, provides for instruction in modern agricultural practices of native farmers in the French North African wheat belt.

Campbell returned about a month ago from a visit to France and North Africa where he made a study of farming methods at the request of the French government. Saturday he gave his report of that study to the White House, the Defense, Agriculture and State Departments, and the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Campbell's program would call for small expenditure. It recommends: (1) Bringing selected young Arab farmers to this country for practical instruction on American wheat farms, and (2) setting up demonstration farms in North Africa for instruction close at hand.

Without waiting for action on the general plan, Campbell is putting part of it into operation at his own expense. He has arranged for 18 youths—6 young native farmers each from Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco—to spend 12 months on the vast Campbell wheat ranch near Hardin, Mont.

These youths will be given instruction in mechanized farming—operation of all the new types of equipment, care and repair of tractors and other farm machinery, management and training in the machine shops, reputedly the best of their kind in this country.

On Campbell's Montana ranch—where he raises as much as 600 000 bushels of wheat a season—yields often run as high as 50 bushels an acre. In North Africa, with similar climate, soil, etc., the native farmers get from 3 to 5 bushels.

Campbell, who spent several years in Russia in the 1920s instructing the Soviet in modern farming methods, refused compensation fro mthe French government for his recent trip.

He was attracted to the North African situation in 1943 and 1944 when he went into the area with American tank crews, when he was serving as brigadier general in the Army.

U. S. Group To Drill for Mexican Oil

Mexico City, March 6 (U.P.).—Antonio J. Bermudez, director general of Petroleos Mexicanos, announced tonight the signing of a drilling contract with a group formed by California oilman Edwin Pauley, the American Independent Oil Co. and the Signal Oil Co.

The contract was described as the most important step taken by Pemex since expropriation of foreign oil companies' property.

Bermudez said the American group's chief job will be the drilling of wells in Tabasco and Veracruz States.

He said the contract provides that Pemex will set aside "the product of the sale of 50 per cent of the production obtained from the wells drilled by the mentioned companies" to pay off their expenses in drilling productive wells. The Americans will not be paid for dry wells.

However, Bermudez said, Pemex will pay the group 15 per cent of the value of the production obtained from their wells "as their profit and compensation for the risks assumed."

The contract will remain in force for 25 years.

Mexican law prohibits exploitation of oil resources by other than Mexican interests. Bermudez said Pemex will supervise and control the contractors' work during the drilling. After a well is completed its control will pass to Pemex for "exploitation."

Fire Razes $266,000 Pier in Tacoma

Tacoma, Wash., March 6 (AP).—A predawn dock fire virtually destroyed Tacoma's new $266,000 Pier No. 1 today before being quelled by Navy and city firefighters in a three-hour battle.

The huge pier was recently reconstructed and had not yet been turned over to the city by the contractor.

Ice-Filled Missouri River Floods Farmlands In Nebraska After Rising to Record Crest

Omaha, March 6 (AP).—The muddy, ice-filled Missouri River flooded hundreds of acres of farmland when it punctured levees south of Nebraska City, Neb., after rising to a record crest today.

Army engineers evacuated some farm families by boat, but the city itself was not flooded. Some livestock was reported lost.

The river was falling rapidly at Nebraska City late today. It hit an all-time high of 25.8 feet early this morning, but was down to 17.4 feet by mid-afternoon. It was still dropping about a foot an hour there.

A crew of 200 men worked all night sandbagging the power house at Nebraska City, and saved it from flooding. The river rose about four feet above the floor of the power house, observers said.

In Kansas City, Army Engineers said at least 40 levees had been topped by water released as major ice jams broke early today. About 175,000 acres along the Missouri and its tributaries were flooded, they said.

A major overflow was in the Missouri bottoms across from Atchison, Kans., where the water stretched more than 3 miles, almost from bluff to bluff.

Government river forecasters here said there would be no danger at Kansas City and downstream.

The first flood death was reported at Missouri Valley, Iowa, today as waters from the Boyer River and a creek which had covered a large part of the town, receded.

The dead man was George W. Johnson, about 77, whose body was recovered from his flooded home.

Limit on Veterans' Pensions Urged

Two Republican members of the House Veterans Committee yesterday proposed limiting veterans' pensions to former servicemen actually in need.

The committee has recommended legislation to give $90 a month pension to all veterans of the last two wars at age 65, regardless of their financial status.

Representatives Van Zandt (R., Penn.) and Davis (R., Wisc.) said in a radio (WTOP) discussion they believed Congress should write a "needs" provision into the bill when it comes before the House for debate probably next week. Both are war veterans and Van Zandt once was national commander of the VFW.

Budgets Increased in 30 States, Survey Shows

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—The Council of State Governments said today that budgets of 30 out of 34 States call for more spending in governmental operations during their next fiscal periods—in most cases record amounts.

The council said the recommended increases are brought about by urgent demands of expanding educational needs, liberalized welfare programs, increased aid to local governments and critical highway projects.

California tops the list in budget estimates with a proposed annual appropriation of $1,060,000,000 for the 1949-50 fiscal year. This would be an increase of $140,200,000 over the current period.

The council survey showed New York is close to the billion mark with a recommended 1949-50 budget of $936,200,000, compared with $812,300,000 for the current fiscal year. California has a budget of more than a billion.

The council said education and welfare needs combined with inflationary pressures to bring about the record budgets being considered. In 32 of the 34 States checked, the State administrations recommended increased appropriations for education and welfare.

It said that "in nearly every State the high cost of general government is expected to be sustained or increased substantially in the coming fiscal period. This expectation is due primarily to the price level and the necessity to provide higher salaries for State employes."

The survey said that in a number of States, highway programs are important budget items showing increased appropriations. Other States are finding veterans' cash bonuses a major factor in rising expenditures. In still others, housing programs are considered vital.

Scott Labels 81st Congress 'Gold Brick'

By The Associated Press

GOP National Chairman Hugh D. Scott, jr., said last night that on the basis of Congress' record to date the American people "bought another gold brick last November."

"Truman medicine is bad medicine even to a Democratic Congress," he said in a statement. "The Eighty-first 'no-can-do' Congress has been in session for slightly more than two months and it has set a notable record for intra-party bickering and inability to act.

"Not a single promise made by Truman during the 1948 campaign has been kept. It is apparent that very few of those promises will be kept, which is probably a good thing for the country—and a sort of backhanded tribute to the Congress, at that."

Scott's statement was issued by the National Committee in connection with a 22-page inventory of the pledges of the Truman Administration as prepared by the committee's research division.

Top Allied Leaders To Discuss Germany

In Red Shakeup

London Sees Bolstering Of Politburo

London, March 6 (AP).—Informed political opinion gained ground today that the Moscow Foreign Office shakeup was aimed at strengthening the Soviet Union's top policy-making body, the Politburo.

Views hardened that V. M. Molotov and A. I. Mikoyan were relieved of their Foreign Office and economic administrative duties in order to concentrate on policy-making at a crucial point in the East-West tug-o'-war.

They were the last in the Communist hierarchy to retain positions as departmental heads. They continue as deputy prime ministers and members of the Politburo.

Political sources were not inclined to see a forthcoming change in Russian foreign policy. On the contrary, they pointed out that Molotov's successor, Andrei Vishinsky and the new deputy foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko, were trained in the tough and uncompromising Molotov school of foreign affairs.

Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and his top aides were studying a report on the Moscow reshuffle from British Ambassador Sir Maurice Peterson. Its contents were kept secret.

Germans Asked by Reds To Drop Western Plan

Solingen, Germany, March 6 (AP). German Communists asked the constitutional convention at Bonn today to end its cooperation in the Western Allied plan for a West German state.

Nenni Forces Join With Reds Against Pact

Rome, March 6 (U.P.).—Italy's Communists and left-wing Socialists formally joined forces today to fight Italian participation in the Atlantic pact. The Communists said they would force a vote of confidence in the pro-Western government.

The two parties held a special joint executive meeting to prepare for Monday's parliament session when Pietro Nenni, left-wing Socialist leader, will demand an immediate debate on the Western military pact.

The Communist Party Unita said the two parties would force a vote of confidence in the government and parliamentary sources said the Reds counted on the backing of wavering government supporters for a vote which might at least jolt anti-Communist Premier Alcide de Gasperi.

Israeli Red Pledges Loyalty to Russians

Tel Aviv, March 6 (AP).—The chain of Communist leaders' statements vowing loyalty to the Soviet Union in event of war reached into the Middle East, to Israel, today.

Meir Willner, Israeli Communist leader and a member of the new parliament declared at a public meeting that "nobody in Israel will raise his hand against the Red army if and when the world plunges again into war."

GI's Wife Strips Fraulein, Beats Her, Cuts Off Hair

Munich, Germany, March 6 (U.P.). The military government today ordered an investigation of charges that an American wife had settled with a husband-stealing fraulein by:

Stripping the German girl of her clothes, cutting off her hair, beating her with bare fists and pouring "a corrosive substance" over her nude body.

The demand for an inquiry was made by Karl Bauer, German father of the victim. Names of the American sergeant and his wife were not disclosed.

Bauer told military authorities that the irate wife called on his 18-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, after finding her name in the sergeant's address book.

By The Associated Press

The United States, Britain and France are expected to hold a highly important conferenee soon on their joint policies for western Germany.

Top officials here and in London and Paris were reported today to believe that the time is near for high level government decisions. They are up against such questions as (1) powers to be reserved to occupying nations when the new western German government comes into force, (2) the common attitude of the West toward Russia on German policies, and (3) ways of integrating western Germany more firmly into the economic and political structure of western Europe.

Moreover, one major aim will be to strengthen Western unity for dealing with whatever spring moves Russia may be planning.

Still Puzzled by Shakeup

It is a foregone conclusion here that significant Soviet maneuvers are bound to come in the next two or three months. That was the belief even before the Soviet Foreign Office shakeup in which Andrei Vishinsky replaced J. M. Molotov last week. Western diplomats were still trying yesterday to figure out its meaning.

On the Western side of the cold war, this loomed as a very busy week. These developments actually are scheduled or in prospect:

1. George F. Kennan, the State Department's top policy planning officer, will begin in Germany a two-to-three weeks first hand review of America's occupation policies and operations. His recommendations to Secretary of State Acheson will help lay the groundwork for American discussions with the British and French. This may mean a meeting in Washington before the end of the month.

Murphy Due Here by Midweek

2. Ambassador Robert Murphy is due here by midweek to complete revision of the State Department's branches dealing with German affairs. Murphy, who has been the chief American diplomatic official under Gen. Lucius D. Clay in Berlin, will head up a new State Department Office of German Affairs.

3. Danish Foreign Minister Gustave Rasmussen is due to leave Copenhagen Tuesday for Washington. He will seek a basis for Denmark's entry into the final talks on the Atlantic defense agreement.

4. The relations between the treaty powers and Italy may be finally decided during the week. Senate Foreign Relations leaders Vandenberg (R., Mich.) and Connally (D., Texas), objected last week to Italy's coming in as an original signer of the Atlantic Pact, saying Italy was essentially a Mediterranean nation.

5. Plans for the windup sessions on the security aliance also may be worked out during the week.

6. The tentative draft of the pact, which would commit the member states to resist aggression, is believed to be virtually complete. Secretary of State Acheson and the other negotiators are expected to meet again today, or possiblly Tuesday, to continue working out final details.

Greek Guerilla Force of 800 Is Broken Up in 6-Day Battle

Athens, March 6 (AP).—A government communique announced today the near destruction of an 800-man guerilla force in six days of battle at Mount Kerdyllia, 40 miles northeast of Salonika.

The band is broken into small groups which are trying to hide in ravines from pursuing military forces, the communique said. It reported at least 140 killed and 149 captured.

In another area, in the Roumeli sector of central Greece, national forces clashed with a Communist band in a snowstorm near Megova. Seven were killed and 27 captured, the communnque said.

In Peloponnesus, where mopping up has been under way for 2½ months, organized resistance has been completely shattered, the communique reported. One band trapped near Eparta lost 63 dead and 67 captured.

Athens was without newspapers because of a conflict over printers' demands. The printers, who get $1.15 an hour, are demanding a 15 per cent increase. The government maintains a wage ceiling as a way of fighting inflation and refuses to allow the increase. Most publishers also oppose the increase.

Printers are the highest paid skilled workers in Greece. One publisher said a printer working a 40-hour week makes nearly twice as much as the chief justice of the Supreme Court.

Bulgar Clerics Pray as Court Weighs Case

Sofia, Bulgaria, March 6 (U.P.). Fifteen Protestant pastors, accused of treason, espionage and black marketing, prayed today in their solitary cells at Sofia Central Prison while three judges deliberated the verdicts to be handed down Tuesday.

Government prosecutors specifically demanded the death penalty for four defendants, but all face the possibility of a death sentence. Verdicts tending "towards the heaviest punishment" were asked for 11 of the churchmen.

The consensus here, however, was that none of the defendants would be sentenced to death.

It was considered likely that several of the pastors, charged with working for an Anglo-American spy ring since 1944, would be sentenced to life imprisonment. The others were expected to receive prison terms ranging up to 15 years.

British Atomic Station Producing Plutonium

London, March 6 (U.P.).—Britain is now producing plutonium at its atomic energy research station in Harwell, it was announced today.

Production is small but "sufficient for investigating chemical engineering problem which will be met later in large-scale handling of plutonium," the fissionable element vital to creating atomic energy, the announcement said.

Israeli Expect Long Delay in Ending War

Tel Aviv, March 6 (NYHT).—Unfavorable developments in the recent armistice negotiations with Trans-Jordan and Lebanon led Israeli sources to predict today that it would require weeks and possibly months to terminate the state of war which still exists between Israel and its Arab neighbors, exclusive of Egypt.

The flush of optimism which followed conclusion of the Egyptian pact has disappeared. Negotiations with Trans-Jordan in particular have gone badly.

Brig. Gen. William E. Riley and Henri Vigier, two chief advisers of acting United Nations Mediator Ralph J. Bunche, brought the armistice problem to Tel Aviv today. They met with Walter Eytan and Reuben Shiloah of the Israeli Foreign Ministry, and Col. Yigal Yadin, army chief of staff.

Monday they will meet with Israeli and Lebanese delegations at Ras El Nakura in a third effort to achieve an armistice on the northern frontier. Israeli officials made clear today that they were ready to sign if and when Lebanon obtained from the Syrian government in writing a pledge to withdraw Syrian forces in Lebanon.

The government decided tonight to submit the question of the 100 million dollar Export-Import Bank loan to the Assembly for ratification. Eliezer Kaplan, finance minister, who has just returned from the United States, said he thought ratification would be only a "formality."

What's Pouring at Dupont Circle?

WE'VE been watching with great interest the progress being made on the Dupont Circle Underpass. For nearly two months (since we first opened the new Wakefield Restaurant at 1359 Connecticut Avenue) we've been listening to the rumble of steam shovels and bulldozers. RECENTLY, the boss noted the arrival of the concrete mixers, which gave him a "brain-storm." To stimulate the quiet "between-hours" cocktail business he has stirred up a brand new policy for the month of March . . . he's practically pouring his drinks down the ditch at these prices!

Aluminum Foil Suit Protects Fire Fighters of U. S. Air Force

Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, March 6 (NYHT)—Developments in aviation research to provide one of the most important requisites of air power—superior equipment—were revealed here today by the Air Material Command of the Air Force.

These include: (1) a Tom Thumb airport at this Air Force base outside Dayton, Ohio, for test-flying models, correct in every aerodynamic detail, or supersonic rocket-and-jet planes of the future; (2) a new fire-fighting suit made of alumninum foil which reflects intense heat and allows its wearer to walk without injury to within a foot or two of a gasoline fire having a temperature of 1800 degrees Fahrenheit; (3) a new oxygen converter system for long-range, high-altitude bombers such as the B-50 and B-36.

This new system uses liquid oxygen and saves more than 80 per cent of the space now required for present oxygen equipment, besides providing more oxygen and greater safety.

The Tom Thumb airport, has runways, control station and all facilities of a full-sized flying field. At its center is a control line base tower in which an operator sits in a conventional pilot's seat behind full-sized controls. Strong, thin wires connected to the model enable the operator to fly it as he would a full-scale airplane, and the tests are filmed.

The new fire-fighting suit, made of aluminum foil laminated to a cotton backing, weighs only 8 pounds. It consists of trousers, zippered jacket, a foil-covered rigid helmet, gauntlets and spats fitting over ordinary rubber overshoes.

TREASON

The party-line double-talk in the declaration by American Communist leaders cannot obscure the bald, menacing facts of their position—they are just as treacherous, just as disloyal to their own country, just as subservient to the aims of Soviet Russia as are their French, Italian and British counterparts.

If there ever were any doubt as to the intentions of American Communists — and their actions left little ground for doubt—it has been dissipated by their insolent indorsement of the stand taken by Maurice Thorez, Palmiro Togliatti and Harry Pollitt.

In rapid succession, these worthies, heads of the French, Italian and British Communist parties, have told the world that, in the event Soviet armies entered their countries, they, and the groups they lead, would be on the side of the Soviets.

There is only one meaning to the statement by William Z. Foster, Communist national chairman, and Eugene Dennis, general secretary. It is that, in the event of a war with the Soviet Union, American Communists also would do everything in their power to aid Russia, and sell out the United States.

The threat becomes more immediate in the light of additional statements by Thorez, who is backed fully by American Communists.

For Thorez has issued a call to his party henchmen in France to act, through strikes and stoppages, to block production of the arms necessary for French security. This is close to mass treason, not in a future contingency, but now.

American Communists have made it clear by their own statement that they support Thorez' treasonable stand in the event of a war with the Soviets. There's no reason to think they don't also support Thorez' plans for sabotage of defense measures.

With Communists all over the world, it is Russia first, last and always. They have exposed their servile obedience to Moscow, and their readiness to commit treason if the Soviets order it.

Clearly, the Communist claim that they are merely another political party, no longer has the slightest shred of support. They have said they are a potential Fifth Column. America must take strong measures to protect itself against this menace. (from The Philadelphia Inquirer)

Javanese Reported Insisting on Capital

Batavia, Java, March 6 (AP).—Indonesian Republican leaders were said today to be holding out for the reestablishment of their regime in Jogjakarta as a condition for participating in The Hague roundtable conference Saturday.

Republican sources pointed out that the Republican leaders would not want to attend unless the Dutch made definite commitments on Indonesian independence.

If the Republicans go to the Netherlands they stand a chance of losing the recognition they now have from the United Nations as one of the two parties to the dispute. Also they would lose face with Republican guerilla forces still fighting the Dutch and with other Indonesian nationalists.

In calling the conference, the Dutch said an effort would be made to transfer sovereignty to a federal Indonesian regime considerably earlier than July 1, 1950—the target date set by the U. N. Security Council.

The Republicans feel if the Security Council and the Dutch accept The Hague talks the effect will be to replace a fairly definite U. N. program for Indonesia with a vague one of Dutch choosing.

The Dutch said the eight Republican leaders remaining on Bangka Island were staying of their own free will and would be allowed to come to Batavia any time. They will not be allowed to return to Jogjakarta, the former Republican capital which Dutch troops captured last December.

Arrests Spark Call For U.N. Aide Curb

The arrest of a Washington Government girl and a Russian United Nations employe touched off demands in some quarters of Congress yesterday for tighter control of aliens entering the country as U. N. personnel.

The suspects jailed in New York are Miss Judith Coplon, 27-year-old analyst in the foreign agents registration section of the Justice Department, and Valentine A. Gubitchev, 32-year-old Russian engineer on the U. N. staff.

Miss Coplon, a Barnard College graduate, and Gubitchev were arrested Friday night in New York, accused of spying, and held in high bond.

FBI agents said they trailed the pair through 9 miles of Manhattan streets to a 3d ave. rendezvous where Miss Coplon was to have turned over to the Russian typed extracts of Justice Department documents. The extracts were found in her purse, the agents reported.

Senator Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.) said they show "unquestionably" that the House Un-American Activities Committee was right last year in charging that spy rings still exist inside the Government. He added that it was "unquestionably" true that Miss Coplon is "part of a fuller organization."

"It is inconceivable that this young lady, on her own, established contact with this Russian in New York," he said.

The Un-American Activities Committee may meet today to consider an investigation. Committee sources indicated a desire to call Miss Coplon and Gubitchev to Washington to testify.

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.), ranking Republican on the Senate super-investigating committee, said he would suggest a preliminary staff study of the case when his group meets, possibly today But he added that "before we rush into it we want to be sure an investigation will not disrupt the work the FBI and Justice Department are doing."

Chairman Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), of the Senate Judiciary Committee said his committee is already checking up on aliens entering the United States through the U. N. and other channels. He charged there are "hundreds of those people coming in here under U. N. protection, that we don't know much about."

He revealed that his committee is working 'feverishly' on a new immigration law to prevent "dangerous" aliens from slipping into the country but he said it is a big job and will take a long time.

McCarran was critical of the State Department. He accused it of "softness' toward the entry of foreign officials, and too great willingness to give diplomatic courtesies to "iron curtain" representatives that our diplomats do not get in their countries.

He said the Coplon-Gubitchev arrests should 'set up a flag" for the State Department to crack down on foreign diplomats in this country. He said he would "prod" the department if it does not take the action he considers necessary.

Mundt said he and Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.) will introduce today a "somewhat tighter form" of their Communist control bill which passed the House of the last Congress but died in the Senate. He said it would "tend to prevent something like this from happening" because it would deny to any Communist the right to hold a Government job. Mundt said the Coplon case shows the need "for a condsiderably gerater degree of administrative caution and care in the selection of employes." In previous spy rings turned up by the House committee, he said, the Government gave the accused a "pat on the wrist and let them go instead of prosecuting them."

Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committe, said the Government "ought to take every possible precaution now that we have apparent evidence that the United Nations is being used for that purpose." But he said he wanted the views of the Justice and State Departments before taking any congressional action. "Let's not get out on a limb and condemn the entire United Nations when we find one bad apple in the barrell," he said.

Senator Harley M. Kilgore, (D., W. Va.), another Judiciary Committee member, said the fact that Miss Coplon first came under suspicion in a routine Government loyalty check shows the disputed loyalty program "has turned up some valuable things." But he added that it "also has hurt some innocent people."

shkin has demanded his immediate release.

If the Soviet Union remains adamant in contending that Gubitchev is entitled to diplomatic immunity, the American spokesman said, it is likely the Russians will not furnish counsel for the engineer to carry further the premise that his arrest was illegal.

Gubitchev was suspended by Trygve Lie, secretary general of the U. N. following his arrest, and his case was held over until March 16.

He was taken to the Federal House of Detention where he received a surprise after-midnight visit today from a delegation that included a high Soviet Embassy official and several American officials.

Lev S. Tolokonnikov, first secretary of the Soviet Embassy in charge of consular affairs, came to the detention pen in a chauffeured limousine. He was accompanied by an unidentified man also from the Embassy.

The Soviet diplomat jousted briefly with reporters, telling them: "I have nothing to do with newspapers."

The visit was arranged through the offices of Thomas Power, deputy secretary general of the United States delegation to the U. N. Power was a member of the party that entered the dention pen with Tolokonnikov, as was Raymond P. Whearty, special assistant to the United States Attorney General.

Miss Coplon had no visitors at the women's house of detention. She had waived examination before Judge Simon H. Rifkind, in United States District Court, to await action by the grand jury and was held in $20,000 bail.

Miss Coplon's counsel, Bertram J. Adams, said he expected to see her Monday morning. He said the family was trying hard to raise the bail money for his client, who was arrested with Gubitchev under the 3d ave. elevated between 14th and 15th sts. The FBI said she had in her purse classified documents that had been "planted" in her office, but which were valueless.

First suspicion was cast on Miss Coplon in the fall of 1946 in a report sent to a member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. She has also been the subject of a loyalty inquiry.

Her purported association with Gubitchev, according to the Department of Justice, had been under surveillance for some time. She was employed in a division of the Department of Justice which handles registration of agents and agencies of foreign governments.

of Feb. 27 aptly termed a 'wildly improbable' event: It is not from the Socialist Soviet Union—which gave 20 million lives in the common struggle against fascism—that the danger of war arises."

They said that neither the American people nor the Soviet Union is responsible for the present world tension. Responsibility rests squarely on Wall Street and its 'bipartisan puppets,." they charged.

"Because we hold these views—because we work to check the warmongers and promote American-Soviet cooperation for peace—you hurl at us the epithet 'traitor,'" they said. "But the violence of your denunication does not settle the question: Are your policies leading America and the world to war or peace?

"This is the real issue of our day."

The trial started January 17, but all of the time since then has been taken up with defense attacks on the Federal jury system. Federal Judge Harold Medina has ruled against the attacks.

Martin Doubts Need for Spy Bill's Secrecy

By the United Press

House Republican Leader Martin yesterday questioned the need for extreme secrecy on the bill to legalize the Nation's new espionage organization.

But Representative Brown (R., Ohio) said it would be "damn foolishness" to discuss the measure publicly 'so a lot of people from all over the world would get information on our intelligence service."

The House is due to take up the legislation today under rules strictly limiting debate and amendments. It would give legal authority to the undercover work of the Central Intelligence Agency, top United States espionage clearing house, and admit up to 100 Iron Curtain "informers to the United States each year.

Both Republicans and Democrats on the House Armed Services Committee were filled in confidentially on why the spy bill must be passed with little discussion. Without much explanation, the measure would give the CIA authority to hire secretly and spend money without strings. The CIA would be required to make only a limited accounting to the Comptroller

About all that can be told is Chairman Vinson (D., Ga.) summed up the committee's attitude: "When you're in the spy business you can't go shouting about it from the house tops."

Brown, a member of the House Rules Committee, which cleared the measure for floor action, agreed.

But Martin said he finds it "difficult to see why it is so secret if the members of the committee and 100 others know about it."

"In Washington, if three people know anything, everybody does," he asserted.

Martin said he plans to get together with GOP members of the Armed Services Committee today to iron out the secrecy issue.

The House is slated to take up the bill under a "closed" rule barring all but committee amendments and limiting debate to one hour.

Brown insisted it is "not secret legislation" because it has been "taken up with responsible committee members and can be discussed with the members of the House in confidence."

The secrecy atmosphere has grown. Chief mystery centers around the provision for admission of aliens "whose intelligence potential has proven of the highest to the national security."

Representative Short (R., Mo.), ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee, told the Rules Committee the aliens are wanted for a "particular secret purpose."

"It's pretty dirty business," he added.

About al lthat can be told is that CIA wants to offer protection and possibly United States citizenship as a reward to dissident Communists or their agents for "squealing" about what is going on in Soviet-controlled territory.

Ferguson to Offer Bill On World Red Plot

Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) said last night he will introduce in the Senate antisubversive legislation which recognizes "the world Communist conspiracy."

"The need for such legislation has been emphasized in the past week by the coordinated statements of world Communist leaders, including leaders of the American Communist Party," Ferguson said in a statement.

"They demonstrated that Communists the world over consider themselves to hold a superior loyalty to Russia."

Ferguson would require that Communist organizations in the United States register with the Government and identify their propaganda.

New Construction Ahead of Year Ago

By The Associated Press

New construction in February was estimated at $1,100,000,000 by the Commerce Department last night.

That was a "normal seasonal drop" of 9 per cent from January, but it represented a 14 per cent gain from February, 1948, the department said.

Private home construction turned in a good performance. It totaled 425 million dollars, a "less-than-normal" drop of 13 per cent from January and a gain of 6 per cent over a year ago.

Totting up the score on construction for the first two months of 1949, the department came up with a $2,400,000,000 total which it said topped the comparable period of last year by 11 per cent.

As to Government outlays on construction in February, the report said that these, totalling 257 million dollars, constituted a 49 per cent jump over February, 1948, although a 10 per cent decline from January.

New construction of hospitals and institutional buildings with public funds reversed the usual January-to-February decline and registered a "small gain," the department said.

Private nonresidential buildings reached a $218,010,000 total, a drop of 5 per cent from January but a 5 per cent increase over February, 1948.

New construction work by privately owned public utilites amounted to 176 million dollars, only 2 per cent below January and 11 per cent above a year ago.

then said, "Yes," a statement which was no less edifying than might be had from a dozen Washington sources on the change in Russia's foreign ministry.

President Truman was as persistent as he usually finds reporters to be.

"Maybe no, too," he said.

Nixon agreed.

"Yes," he said, "maybe no."

Amid laughter, he and the President agreed that perhaps 'No comment" might be the best answer after all.

The flight from Washington was made in less than four hours, the Independence taking off from the Military Air Transport Service base at Washington at 8:47 a. m. and landing here at 12:34 p. m.

He was met here by his Chief of Staff, Admiral William F. Leahy, who is recuperating from an operation. Leahy drove with him to the "little White House" on the Key West submarine base and then to his own quarters.

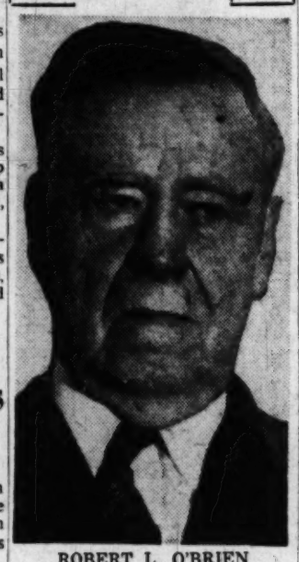
Aide Recalls Cleveland Cancer Story



ROBERT L. O'BRIEN
. . Recalls old times

By Judith F. Spivak
Post Reporter

The story of how newsmen were kept in the dark about a startling presidential secret—the fact that Grover Cleveland had cancer in 1893—was disclosed yesterday by Robert Lincoln O'Brien.

The 83-year-old former personal secretary to Cleveland told the tale to a reporter 56 years after Cleveland's second Inaugural, which he witnessed on March 4, 1893.

Cleveland, a fierce proponent of the gold standard, felt he was the only man who stood in the way of the free silver interests, according to O'Brien. He said the President feared a Wall Street panic if news of his serious illness got out.

The cancer, discovered inside Cleveland's mouth, necessitated an operation by a corps of surgeons, who removed six teeth and much of the President's left upper jaw, O'Brien relates. It was performed in Buzzard's Bay, aboard the yacht of a friend, while newsmen, left ashore, were told at first the Chief Executive was "resting."

When the White House press corps developed suspicions, O'Brien says, Daniel S. Lamont, Secretary of War, took over the job of "fooling the press."

Lamont told the dubious pressmen that the Chief Executive had been unbelievably careless about his teeth, and that he had finally decided to "face the music" with a lengthy siege of dental work aboard the yacht. Lamont then added that the President was foolishly embarrassed about the whole business, O'Brien says.

Although the Philadelphia Press did carry a story hinting at the President's true condition, O'Brien notes, the rest of the Nation's papers swallowed "the Lamont story." Clinching factor was a statement by L. Clarke Davis, a close friend of the Clevelands and editor of the Philadelphia Ledger, who issued a convincing, though uninformed announcement about the President's good health.

Cleveland recovered from the operation, and the secret was never divulged until after his death in 1906 of a heart ailment.

O'Brien left Cleveland in 1895 to become Washington correspondent for the Boston Transcript, and later the New York Evening Post. In 1906, he went back to Boston as editor of the Transcript, and from 1910 until his retirement in 1928 was president and editor of the Boston Herald.

"I've been a loafer ever since," says O'Brien, but he admits he accepted an appointment here as Tariff Commissioner in 1931 from Herbert Hoover, and stayed on at Franklin D. Roosevelt's request until 1937.

Machinist Calls on Labor to Unite Politically

last year, the various political leagues affiliated with labor unions often worked together on the State and local level to back prolabor and defeat antilabor candidates. But since the elections, the AFL and CIO have gone their separate ways. The AFL executive council, at its meeting in February, rejected for the second consecutive year the CIO's bid for joint action on congressional legislation.

Galvanized by Taft Law

Various union groups had experimented with political auxiliaries at one time or another, but it was the passage of the Taft-Hartley Management-Labor Relations Act in the summer of 1947 that galvanized the labor movement into furious reaction.

The CIO reorganized its pamphleteering Political Action Committee into a doorbell-ringing organization that brought out the vote. The AFL sallied into practical politics with a similar affiliate, Labor's League for Political Education. The International Association of Machinists sponsored its own Non-Partisan Political League; the Railway Brotherhoods, Railway Labor Political League; the United Mine Workers, Labor's Non-Partisan League. There were a score others as well.

It has been estimated by the research staff of Congressional Quarterly that on the national level, the union political organizations spent $1,300,000 in the last election.

AFL to Bolster League

Since then, the AFL and CIO have both taken steps to strengthen their individual political organizations.

The AFL is going to bolster its Labor's League for Political Education with a national newspaper, Nation-wide radio show, and series of moving pictures, together with $750,000 raised in special voluntary membership assessments. The league spent only $312,000 in the '48 campaign.

The CIO, whose political expenditures through the Political Action Committee amounted to over half a million dollars last year, is planning to enter not only State politics this year, but also county and municipal politics. The CIO expects to raise at least another 500 thousand dollars in voluntary $1 contributions this year.

Calls Organizations "Flimsy"

In his off-the-record speech, Hayes in effect told the gathering of labor representatives that the union movement had been lucky in the '48 elections.

Labor's political organizations were "flimsy," he said, very loosely knit, and without any planned program of cooperation or coordination of their efforts.

The political auxiliaries of the unions, Hayes asserted, were "pitifully weak financially." In fact, he added, "they lacked most all of the resources necessary for successful political action."

The determination of a comparatively few individuals, together with the fortunate circumstance that the prolabor, antilabor issues were clearly defined in this election, gave organized labor a victory on November 2, the machinists' leader declared.

Urges Repair of Weak Spots

But even in the last election, Hayes said, "a few of our labor leaders did cast their lot with the reactionaries." Warned Hayes:

"If we are to be successful in future political campaigns we must recognize our weak spots and repair them. It will not be as easy in the future for us to be as successful as we were on last November 2.

"In the first place, I doubt if the issues in future campaigns will be as clearly drawn as they were in the last election, and secondly, in future elections we will be opposed by much more cunningly disguised reactionaries."

Hayes urged the unions to stay in politics, to cooperate at least on the political level, to stay on the alert between elections, and to educate "politically and economically"—without letup—their rank and file members.

First Oil Strike Is Reported in Tidelands Area

New Orleans, March (AP).—The first oil strike of 1949 in the Louisiana Tidelands was reported by the California Co. today in what is believed to be the largest salt dome in the world.

The discovery is a dramatic climax to a search for black gold in the area which began in 1930, and was carried on by various companies until several years ago.

The new well is flowing 255 barrels a day on initial test.

Harder To Park

A major fault in the sleek and dazzling new limousines that are pouring off production lines is that their size seems to grow with the advertising blandishments. Bumpers and all, some of these new models are 18 feet long or more. These rubber-tired battleships may contain built-in ice-boxes, aluminum-coated valve caps, mohair-covered spark plugs and hydromatic clocks, but no one has yet figured out how to park an 18-foot car in a 16-foot space.

The problem has particular pertinence in Washington, for as more of these rolling palaces congest the streets there seems to be less and less space available in which to park them. Although the demise of the Merchants Parking Service plan for fringe lots has not yet evoked public protest, we dare say it will turn out eventually to be a minor tragedy. Moreover, one of the principal lots now available is soon to be occupied by the new courthouse, and we know of no plan to provide parking space elsewhere.

Washington and other cities are likely to feel the pressure increasingly, and to the extent that downtown areas may become virtually inaccessible except by public transportation. Perhaps the auto manufacturers will yet come forth with a solution in the form of retractable grilles and rubber necks for the drivers. They could, of course, take up the sensible example of the British and model their products along the proportions of the midget widgets now coming into the country or the three-wheeled enlarged velocipede that has attracted favorable comment. If they don't do something, one of these days the cores of the cities are going to be inaccessible to anything bulkier than roller skates.

Clumsy Handling

For a country that prides itself on its sense of public relations, the United States really ought to do better in handling the few visitors who drop in on us from behind the iron curtain. We have commented already on the sideshow treatment of the two Soviet aviators who came here hoping to sample the life of Virginia. Similarly clumsy treatment seems to have been given to Anna Louise Strong, who has just been deported from Moscow and flown back to this country. The case of Miss Strong seriously suggests the need of an understanding on policy in these matters among the State Department, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Immigration Service and the Customs Service.

Miss Strong, now 63, is a deluded American radical who became a convert to communism a generation ago. There can be little doubt that she returned to the United States disillusioned with the Soviet wonderland. She seems to have found in Communist China the revolutionary ardor which Soviet Russia now lacks. She wrote glowingly about Mao Tze-tung, and hinted that Chinese communism was a nationalist movement like Tito's in Yugoslavia. Such, we suspect, was the heresy that earned her deportation to American shores.

This wretched woman might have been useful to the United States if her arrival had been intelligently handled. Instead, FBI agents, Immigration and Customs agents and newspaper reporters swooped upon her at LaGuardia Field as if, in truth, she had been a criminal. She was kept at the airport for four hours. She was photographed with so many police surrounding her that, if the picture had been reproduced in Pravda, a Soviet reader might have imagined ours to be the real police state. She promptly received one subpena from the Federal grand jury investigating communism and hints of another from the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

We are not suggesting that Anna Louise Strong deserved particular consideration from the United States. Her case did, however, call for more subtle handling than it seems to have received. If the State Department or the Central Intelligence Agency felt American policy might be served by receiving this woman quietly, suavely and without fuss, New York agents of the Federal Government should have been instructed to act accordingly. As it was, Miss Strong had her wild-eyed notions of the United States confirmed, and is already in the hands of fellow travelers in New York who will exploit her for other than American purposes.

More serious than these few exceptional cases are those of the Czechs, now reported to number at least a hundred every day, who flee into the American zone of Germany. These are mostly intellectuals, able to bring us valuable information if we know how to get it from them. Shall we presuppose, as some Army officials apparently do, that they are spies? Or shall we send thoroughly informed officials to question them and to make the greatest possible use of them, not only for now but for the future? We showed more good sense in dealing with captured Axis generals in wartime than we do now, when there is no war, with these political refugees who are eager to put their talents at our service.

Constitutional Issue

The first week of the filibuster in the Senate attained some aspects of a momentous constitutional debate in spite of the fact that the Southern Senators are determined to defeat any limitation of debate by continuous talking. Much was said about the nature of our Government, the function of the Senate, and the intellectual climate that democracy must have in order to flourish. To say the least, the discussion gives added perspective to the country's civil rights problems. Its only deplorable aspect to date has been the announced intention of the minority to make the outcome depend not upon reason and persuasion but the upon the coercion of endless talk.

We cannot agree with those who say that the issue before the Senate is the protection of minority rights. To be sure, the Senate is a bulwark against overhasty legislation; we hope it will always be such. In a free country there must necessarily be checks upon the tyranny of the majority. Individual rights must be upheld by the courts against unconstitutional legislation. And aside from constitutional rights, any policy closely touching the lives of the people is likely to fail, as prohibition did, if it is imposed upon a large and bitterly antagonistic minority by Federal force. All these factors must be carefully weighed when the Senate comes to debate the various separate measures in the President's civil rights program.

But that bridge can be crossed only when Congress comes to it. The question now before the Senate is merely whether or not Rule XXII shall be amended so that a two-thirds majority may end debate, with allowance for every Senator to have his say even after cloture has been invoked. Some Senators have talked as if the proposed amendment would deprive their States of representation in the Senate. On the contrary, it would make such representation more meaningful by depriving a relatively small group of the power to jam the legislative gears. It is absurd to say that an effective rule against filibusters would impinge unfavorably upon our constitutional system. The Constitution specifically gives each house of Congress the power to determine its own rules. The founding fathers must have concluded that this power would be used to save the Senate as well as the House from becoming an "imposing spectacle of impotence."

The only candid argument against the proposed change in Rule XXII that we have heard is that if the Senate is freed from filibusters it may make some unwise decisions. But that is true of any form of democratic government, or any other type of government. The real question is whether greater mistakes will not be made by inaction forced upon the Senate by a minority than action supported, after due deliberation, by the majority. The way of popular government is to debate and let the majority decide. When unwise decisions are made, they will have to be corrected by experience. But under no circumstances can we permit the door to experimentation to be indefinitely closed by a willful minority without sacrificing the very essence of American constitutional government.

When Rule XXII has been amended, Congress will have to face Mr. Truman's civil rights proposals, not as political slogans, but as subjects for practical legislation. It may then decide, for example, as we think it should, that a constitutional amendment is the proper means of abolishing State poll taxes. But in no event can a talkfest to prevent Congress from taking up this or any other problem be justified. We have here not majority coercion of the minority but minority coercion of the majority. It is a great constitutional issue, and, as we see it, the outcome will determine whether our system of representative Government can be reasonably adjusted to the requirements of the times in which we live.

Regional Hospital

It is good news that northern Virginia is being awakened to the health problem presented by the lack of a hospital for communicable diseases. Health workers from nearby counties and communities, meeting informally, have undertaken to stir up grass-roots interest in the establishment of facilities to take care of mental patients as well as those suffering from cerebro-spinal fever, diphtheria, infantile paralysis and like diseases. The plan is to work for the appointment of local hospital commissions from which a regional commission can be drawn. With local funds furnishing the basis, a regional group will be able to qualify for State and Federal aid to complete the project.

Northern Virginia is probably no more deficient in hospital facilities than many areas where population has expanded rapidly. Nevertheless, it is significant that a region approaching half a million people has no adequate communicable disease service. The Alexandria Hospital has but two beds for such patients, the Arlington Hospital has none, and there are no facilities in Fairfax or Prince William Counties. Loudoun County facilities at Leesburg are being expanded to provide six communicable disease beds, but these will not help the situation in neighboring areas. Nor are District hospitals of much assistance. Gallinger and Children's Hospitals will take infantile paralysis cases in emergencies, but it is virtually impossible for the sorely overburdened District institutions to accommodate other cases. The nearest Virginia facilities are at Charlottesville.

No one can say how many deaths have resulted from this sorry situation or how much it has contributed to the spread of infectious diseases. But certainly the parents of a child with, say, cerebro-spinal fever would be driven to despair by the absence of any adequate institution for isolation and treatment. The remedy cannot come in a day, but what can be done is to arouse community consciousness and enlist the support of medical and lay groups. With assistance under the Hill-Burton Act, it ought to be feasible to provide, on a regional basis, facilities that none of the individual communities can afford.

German Progress

The United States Military Government reports that industrial production in western Germany, which stood at only 51 per cent of the 1936 level last June, prior to currency reform, had risen to 75 per cent by November. The occupying authorities do not, of course, attribute this rapid industrial expansion entirely to the new currency. However, currency reform gave the Germans, employers and workers alike, an incentive previously lacking to increase their productive efforts in the belief that their exertions would be rewarded by payment in money possessing real purchasing power.

In addition to this psychological uplift, various other factors have been operative to increase productivity, such as more adequate coal supplies, increased imports of industrial raw materials, good domestic harvests and much larger food imports. The Berlin correspondent of the London Times says that for the first time since the occupying authorities took over, "food has ceased to be an obsession" with Germans in the western zones. The improvement in that respect has undoubtedly been of prime importance as a spur to production.

The Washington Post has pointed out repeatedly that currency reform, though a highly important mechanistic aid to recovery, is not a cure for deep-seated economic ills. Insofar as Germany is concerned, currency reform to date has made it possible to stimulate domestic industrial activity, but progress has been facilitated by larger amounts of outside assistance in the form of ECA grants and appropriations by the United States and Great Britain to finance imports of food, seeds, fertilizer and petroleum products. However, the occupation came close to being balanced without external aid at a level somewhat in excess of the prewar figure for foreign trade.

One of the disturbing aspects of the post-currency-reform production picture that is ignored in the report, but is emphasized by most foreign observers, is the growth of the German luxury trade. For instance, expensive restaurants catering to a favored few have been rebuilt, while rehousing plans have slowed down, although thousands of people in the large cities are living in ruins and cellars. Furthermore, shop windows are filled with expensive articles of clothing and nonessentials despite acute shortages of much needed consumer items offered at prices that the average worker can afford to pay.

This situation is the result of the premature abolition of price and distribution controls on most raw materials and manufactured goods. The political, to say nothing of the economic, consequences of this increase in luxury spending may prove to be extremely serious, unless it is promptly checked. For a country in the position of Germany cannot afford to expand manpower and material resources on the production of nonessentials, so long as the great majority of its people remain heavily dependent on foreign aid for the basic necessities of life. Evidences that German production is picking up rapidly would be much more encouraging if there were greater certainty that the expanding output would contribute to raising the general standard of living to a corresponding extent instead of being diverted in part to production of goods that minister to the wants of a select few.

A LETTER TO ONE AMONG THE ROOTS

Remember walking the garden here
In the cool damp dews in the spring of year?

The arbors hung with roses alone—
We made our way over grass and stone,

And to the fullest limb we would climb,
Remember? But winter's come and time

Seems incredibly slow to one who Always knew the green rains and the dew.

The wind we heard in the rustling leaves
Is snowy now, and the bare tree grieves;

And the pale pigeons that took to air
Stand silly 'round with a curious stare.

I hear in the tree where we heard song
Silence of music played now too long.

The sweet spring breeze that was our own
Plays dumb in the leafless tree alone.

Cling tightly to roots of leafless limbs
Deep under the earth, and send up hymns,

For it must be now the source of song
Lies deep in the roots that you make strong;

And walking in orchards hung pure white,

Debt To Britain

In considering whether or not to continue aid to Britain under the Marshall Plan we should remember the following facts:

Britain was the only nation to fight from beginning to end on our side in two world wars. Britain held off our Nazi enemies singlehanded for a year and a half after the fall of France; and for about a year after we got in the fight held the line while we completed our preparations to tackle our common enemies in Europe.

As a result of these efforts, the British lost three times as many people killed by enemy action in proportion to her population as we did.

Britain also lost in two world wars a good part of her shipping and practically all her overseas investments and became heavily a debtor nation; while in the same time we gained in shipping and became heavily a creditor nation by taking advantage of the neutral position that we maintained for a good part of these two wars. Surely some compensation is morally owed by us to Britain for her longer period of fighting in two wars in which we eventually but not promptly recognized that we likewise had a stake.

"Abuse Of The Schools"

With regard to your March 1 editorial, "Abuse of the Schools," I would like to clarify a somewhat nebulous situation. The condition prevailing in the Arlington school system is not unique, but rather one of many existing in the United States.

That religion should be completely excluded from the public schools seems essentially at variance with the original tenets upon which the public school system was founded in our country. The founding fathers, in order to insure moral and religious training for their children so that they would develop with an understanding of sound democratic ideals, deemed it necessary that the Government should foster the school system.

The inherent factor in this provision, of course, was that the Government should necessarily retain its high moral and religious principles. The fact that religion is now excluded from our public schools arose as an historical expedient during the Civil War.

To educate American children without an appreciation of moral issues is to deny a fundamental necessity in man—that of spiritual need. The most elementary concept in morality is the knowledge of right and wrong. Does it follow then, that if American children are denied this knowledge they will grow into the human beings who will preserve the great democratic way of life?

"Ex-Reds As Pets"

The writer of the March 2 editorial condemning lionization of former Communists, is apparently one of those fuzzy-minded liberals who make such excellent dupes for the Communists.

The Communist movement throughout the world is a new phenomenon in history—a mass conspiracy operating both here and abroad through conspiratorial methods and pledged to strict secrecy. To keep under surveillance 75,000 Communists in the United States, and ten times that many fellow travelers, would require the services of a tremendous secret police. We do not have that now. It is wholly contrary to our American traditions. How then can we expect to know what is going on inside this conspiracy if not through defections?

Recently, the news carried a story of a Soviet flier who fled to Japan and disclosed valuable information which, no doubt, would be otherwise unobtainable.

A noted military authority has estimated that the next war will be 75 per cent psychological. If we are so inept in this warfare on a small scale where only a few individuals are involved, how can we expect to win such a war when millions are involved? Or shall it be said of America that she has a faculty of destroying her allies and friends?

UAW Belittling

I greatly appreciate J. A. Livingston's timely article, "UAW Seeks Worker Loyalty by Always Belittlin' GM."

Walter Reuther has always bitten the hand that fed him. One would think no one is entitled to a profit; yet I never knew a poor man to give employment to others, and many of the stockholders, who make their jobs possible, are far from getting even a fair return on their investments, present market prices erroneously indicating a high yield (not on cost).

"Bad And Good"

Your February 27 editorial "Bad and Good" condemned the appointment of former Senator Mon C. Wallgren, head of the National Resources Board, as a bad appointment on the grounds that Wallgren was unfitted for the post and that it constituted a revival of "Government by crony."

Of course, the fitness of anyone is a matter of opinion. In my opinion, the Wallgren appointment was an excellent one, but this would not have led me to write a protest.

Somewhere in the public consideration of this appointment the record should show some of the facts which indicate that Wallgren is unusually well qualified to discharge the responsibility of preparing against a repetition of the serious weakness in our national defense in World War II, arising from acute shortages in strategic materials vital to defense production.

Wallgren was a member of the Truman Committee from its organization on March 8, 1941, until his resignation as Senator on January 9, 1945. During that period, he was chairman of the Subcommittee on Aircraft and Light Metals. This subcommittee held extensive hearings in strategic materials and prepared the following reports: "Aluminum"—(Part 1, Report No. 480, Seventy-seventh Congress, First Session) June 26, 1941; "Light Metals, Aircraft and Other Matters"—(Part 6, Report No. 480, Seventy-seventh Congress, Second Session) April 5, 1942; "Aircraft"—(Part 10, Report No. 10, Seventy-eighth Congress, First Session) July 10, 1943; "Magnesium"—(Part 17, Report No. 10, Seventy-eighth Congress, Second Session) March 13, 1944; Sections of the annual reports dealing with aircraft and light metals.

I am confident that, if you would examine the reports and hearings of the Truman Committee, especially those dealing with strategic material shortages, or if you would check with Wallgren's colleagues on the committee, both Democrats and Republicans, I believe you would become convinced of two things:

First, that Wallgren had an unusual familiarity with the facts and the problems of strategic material shortages.

Second, that Wallgren exhibited a statesmanlike and courageous attitude in the public interest in exposing weaknesses in our position with respect to strategic materials, including those weaknesses arising from monopolies, cartel agreements and restrictive trade practices stifling the development of a strong economic position in strategic materials in the United States.

In addition, I believe inquiry will convince you that Wallgren was an extremely valuable member of the Truman Committee, even though the work in which he specialized attracted less public attention than some other of the committee's investigations.

I find nothing inherently wrong in the President appointing a man to his official family whose capabilities, including that of working harmoniously with others, he knows of his own knowledge rather than by hearsay. "Government by crony" is a good catch phrase, but loses its sting where the friend the President knows and trusts is competent and experienced.

Name-Caller's Fate

Now that the smoke of battle between Mr. Truman and his adversaries has cleared sufficiently for us to view the strewn wreckage upon the field, we can appraise the extent of damage done with dispassionate calm and reflection.

Thus, I think it is not impertinent to postulate that the Bible might be quoted appropriately in this case so that overzealous ones for righteousness might not lose all hope of Mr. Truman's ultimate salvation.

For Matthew 5:22 has this to say about name-calling: "And whosoever shall say to his brother, 'Raca' (one who speaks contemptuously of) shall be in danger of the council; but whosoever shall say to his brother, 'Thou fool', shall be in danger of hell fire."

So it is probable that Mr. Truman's "S. O. B." was no more in degree or temper than the names referred to in Matthew. It seems to the writer that Mr. Truman has paid his penalty on the first count by being called before the council of public opinion, and has done no more than become a subject for consideration for hell fire.

Federal Salaries

As a long-time Government employe it always arouses my ire when I hear blanket condemnations of Federal workers.

Representative Burdick's letter, as quoted by Jerry Kluttz on March 3, is a good example of misstatement, misinformation, and mischief.

It would be good news to the majority of Government stenographers if his stated salary for them was indeed $3928. Perhaps the gentleman would be willing to sponsor a deficiency appropriation to raise them all to this figure.

Posting The Books

By J. M. Lalley

Excelsior!

POINT OF NO RETURN, by John P. Marquand. (Little, Brown, $3.50.)

Mr. Marquand is a master of the mechanics of story-telling, as they have been adapted to an age of such manifold distractions as ours. He knows how to make everything as effortless as possible for his reader, by avoiding subtleties of characterization, complexities of situation, by keeping the narrative in brisk and steady but not breathless movement, yet disclosing little or nothing of its direction and destination, and skillfully suggesting that he has too much in reserve to permit him to linger over any one incident or to exploit its implications. The dialogue is smooth, congruous and economical, as in a well-constructed comedy; no character is permitted to say anything more than is relevant to the author's purpose. Thus the characters have the reality of persons recognized without being really known or understood. To put it metaphysically we are dealing, in the case of both characters and milieu, with accidents rather than substances. Finally, the popularity of the theme has been well tested, for the book has to do with what the late Professor James called the cult of the bitch-goddess.

Mr. Marquand has rewritten the familiar American success story in terms of social satire. It is his satirical intention that makes the novel worth discussion; for since satirist is another name for moralist, we are obliged to search for the moral; and it is precisely here that Mr. Marquand, with all his technical skill, disappoints us. It is not ordinarily necessary that a novel should have a moral, any more than that it should have a sociological message. The primary function of the novel is merely one of entertainment, which is probably why novel-reading was until relatively recent times considered a rather frivolous occupation. But it is otherwise with the satirical novel. The purpose of the satirist is not primarily entertainment but reform. Thus he must in some manner indicate an alternative course of conduct to the vices or follies he exposes.

Now the vices exposed by Mr. Marquand are snobbery and materialism, embodied in his principal character, Charles Gray, and in his ambitious wife Nancy. Charles cannot forget that he was born on Spruce st. and that because of his father's improvidence he has the additional handicap of having been educated at Dartmouth rather than at Harvard. Charles has grown up in the New England town called Clyde, which I supposed at first to be Salem, but which I am told is Newburyport. Anyway, it is a place where after three or four generations a very sharp social line still separates the descendants of shipowners and great landowners from the posterity of mere ship captains. Young Gray is in the second category, and although it places him a cut or two above his friend Jackie Mason, who cannot forget that his grandfather was only a druggist, it is enough to prevent him from marrying Jessica Lovell; the girl from the big house on Johnson st., who has fallen in love with him.

The main interest of the book lies in the contrast between Charles and his father, a saner and more amiable person, though this is not Charles' opinion nor, apparently, Mr. Marquand's. The elder Gray actually had a chance at Harvard, but threw it up after his first year, evidently because of the snubs he received there at the hands of the pukkasahibs. Along with his many natural virtues he has one serious vice, which is gambling in the stock market, less, it seems, from motives of avarice than from a desire to avenge himself upon the system, which is evidently personified for him by Lawrence Lovell who occupies the big house on Johnson st. and whose social preeminence, based upon several generations of money, is unquestioned. John Gray squanders a good many thousand dollars; but eventually in the great boom of the 1920s does make a killing. Since even in Clyde social distinctions can be dissolved by money so that for a time there seems a fair chance that Jessica will marry Charles. Further to qualify himself for her Charles gives up his job in the local mill and takes one in an investment house in Boston with Brahmin clientele. But his father perversely refuses to get out of the market after the great break of 1929, and presently, after losing almost everything, quietly poisons himself. Charles, who has made a bit of money himself in the market is obliged to throw it into the estate to save the family honor and to provide his mother with a competence. Mr. Lovell is now in position to forbid the marriage, and Jessica dutifully but sadly obeys. Charles moves on to New York, to a job with an ultra-conservative bank, a wife with an even grimmer determination than his own to pursue the main chance, a home in Westchester, a tour of war service, Brooks Brothers clothes, and a membership in the second-best country club.

Thus the career of Charles Gray, which with some modifications of circumstances might be that of millions of Americans, affords an example of an utterly sterile existence, which is hardly to be called living, since it resembles a form of somnambulism. Both Mr. Marquand and his hero are aware of this, but both are persuaded that nothing nobler is possible. Thus the slave of the bitch-goddess should assume his gilded chain, if not with joy with cynical fortitude, and Charles is a better man than his father who fled from responsibility to read Boswell or Burton in his room or to seek a genial but unprofitable companionship among his social inferiors in the Clyde firehouse. The moral, which strikes me as a rather shallow and shabby one, is that, although material success is nothing much, even when you have won it, it is still preferable to [illegible]

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Hoover, Forrestal—And Symington

THE CRITICISM of the defense establishment by the Hoover Commission is so serious, indeed so sensational, that one must ask whether the reforms it recommends go to the root of the trouble.

LIPPMANN

The trouble, as defined by Mr. Hoover's Commission, is that "centralized civilian control scarcely exists. Each military branch follows its own purposes and, due both to the weakness of the Defense Secretary's powers and to the confusion of authority over them, has very much a free hand. In the period ahead when national security will demand a large military budget, this time-honored device for subordinating the military to civilian control will be ineffective. The remedy must be sought through organization of the executive branch to establish firm lines of authority and accountability."

THE QUESTION, it seems to me, is whether the remedy can, in fact, be found "through organization"—whether the existing lack of firm lines of authority and accountability is due to a faulty organization, or to something much greater and much more difficult to deal with. That something else is mentioned (page 31) in the Eberstadt Task Force Report but not in the Hoover report itself. That something else, "the first, and most basic requisite for sound national security programs . . . is clarity and consistency of over-all national policy."

The Hoover Report says nothing about the over-all national policy with which the civilians are to "control" the military. The report seems to assume that "through organization" the civilians will arrive at an over-all national policy for controlling the military. Is that a sound assumption? I venture to doubt it.

LET US consider the controversy between Mr. Forrestal and Mr. Symington which came into the open last spring and is still going on. Mr. Forrestal, as Secretary of Defense, was unable to control Mr. Symington who, though a civilian, is the spokesman of the Air Force. Was that because Mr. Forrestal's "authority . . . is weak and heavily qualified by the provisions of the Act of 1947?"

Surely that was not the reason why Mr. Forrestal tolerated the open insubordination of Mr. Symington. Regardless of the provisions of the Act of 1947, it was possible for Mr. Forrestal to assert his superior authority by going to the President and offering to resign unless Mr. Symington was disciplined or dismissed. Why did Mr. Forrestal not do that? Why did he let his authority be defied? In the last analysis, I believe, because Mr. Forrestal was not altogether sure that Mr. Symington might not be right.

THE FORRESTAL-Symington drama discloses the real problem of civilian control of the military establishment. Symington, the spokesman of one branch and of one strategical conception, was clear, forceful, and untroubled by doubt. Forrestal, the responsible head, far more aware than Symington of what was at stake, was too deeply troubled by doubt to act authoritatively and decisively.

If he supported Symington he had to overrule the judgment of his most experienced Navy and Army advisers, and he would be staking the security of the Nation on a theory which had never been tested in actual warfare. If, on the other hand, he overruled Symington, he had to accept the awful risk of depriving this country of the kind of armament which may, given the unprecedented circumstances of our position in the world, be the most suitable and effective kind of armament.

IF WE consider Forrestal's dilemma, I do not see how we can fail to conclude that neither he nor his successor could resolve it, as the Hoover Commission supposes, "through organization."

The problem is at bottom not one of organizing so that civilians can control the military. The problem is to make the fateful decision of fundamental strategy and policy which, as the Eberstadt Task Force pointed out, is the first and most basic requisite of a sound program and an efficient organization.

NO ONE WHO appreciates the gravity of the decision will think that any civilian, be it the President or the Secretary of Defense, could make it even if "the lines of authority and accountability" were as firmly and clearly established as the Hoover Commission, quite rightly, recommends. If the responsibility were fixed clearly, it would then be evident that no individual can take such responsibility. For it involves the fate of the Nation. That is the kind of decision which no man can make. It has to be hammered out on the anvil of public debate.

Then, and then only, when he knows that the Nation realizes the risks and shares his responsibility, can any civilian, who must control, that is to say overrule some of his military advisers, dare to do it, and still sleep at night.

Britons Get Cheering News About Milk, Eggs, Clothing

London, March 6 (AP).—Britons had only their usual small weekly meat ration for Sunday dinner today—but there was cheering news for them about food and clothing rations.

Milk and eggs soon will be plentiful, at least for a short period during the spring when the cows and hens are most productive.

Food Minister John Strachey announced that for the first time since the dollar crisis 18 months ago, 40,000 tons of dried fruit and 10 million pounds of frozen eggs will be imported from the United States. The fruit will be in the grocery stores by summer; the eggs will go to bakers.

At the same time, the responsible Sunday paper, The Observer, said the government has decided to end clothes rationing next month.

Matter Of Fact

The Meaning Of Vishinsky

THE BASIC AIMS of Soviet policy remain the same, whether Andrei Vishinsky or V. M. Molotov is Foreign Minister. These aims, as they are now understood by many informed officials and expert observers in Europe, will be discussed in the next report in this space. Yet those best equipped to speculate are inclined to believe that Molotov's replacement by Vishinsky may presage an important change, not in Soviet aims, but in Soviet methods.

To understand what Vishinsky's appointment is believed to mean, it is necessary to examine the attitude of the Kremlin to the post of Foreign Minister before Molotov succeeded Maxim Litvinoff in 1939. This attitude had something in common with that of the rich English family to the family solicitor. The solicitor is trusted to handle the unpleasant business of dealing with strangers. But he is expected to obey orders. And he is not asked to dinner—he is definitely not one of the family.

Molotov's two predecessors, Foreign Commissars Chicherin and Litvinoff, were clearly in this category. Neither was an "old Bolshevik." Neither was a member of the Politburo, and thus neither had any influence in forming policy. By the Politburo members, the Foreign Commissar's task was considered menial. It was merely to play out the farce of maintaining relations with the "bourgeois" world while the real instruments of Soviet foreign policy, the international Communist parties, worked to destroy that world.

MOLOTOV'S ACCESSION to the Foreign Ministry marked a basic change in the Kremlin's concept of the Foreign Minister's role. Molotov is a member of the Politburo, and has been considered second only to Stalin in that powerful body. Molotov is an old Bolshevik—he has been at Stalin's right hand for almost 30 years. And Molotov's first act as Foreign Minister was to negotiate the Nazi-Soviet pact with the obscene Joachim von Ribbentrop.

Until that time, it had been the cardinal rule of Soviet policy that Soviet aims could only ultimately be achieved by the disintegration of the non-Soviet world followed by world revolution. The pact signalized the first Soviet attempt to substitute diplomacy for revolution. The Kremlin clearly expected that the consequence of the deal with Hitler would be war between the Axis capitalist system and the capitalist system of the Allies, in which both would be destroyed, leaving the Soviet Union to inherit their power.

THIS first great effort by the Kremlin to achieve its aims by diplomatic means failed in the end. Yet Molotov remained both Foreign Minister and a member of the Politburo. After the war, the Kremlin clearly anticipated a second, and more successful, diplomatic effort. By all the laws in the holy books of Marx and Lenin, the capitalist powers, in their blind greed, should have fallen out among themselves in the desperate struggle for markets. As the tension mounted, the Soviet Union could make a diplomatic deal to divide the world with the most powerful capitalist center of power, the United States, with the lion's share going to the Soviet Union.

Nothing of the sort has happened. Instead, the non-Soviet world is united for its own defense as never before. The "peace offensive," the last Soviet effort to make a deal with the United States at the expense of the rest of the world—has failed.

NOW MOLOTOV is replaced by Vishinsky, and at the same time the leaders of the international Communist movement are forced to acknowledge publicy their allegiance to the Soviet Union in case of war. Vishinsky is not an old Bolshevik—indeed, as a former Menshevik and deviationist he has had to exhibit an exceptionally agile servility to survive. Nor is he a member of the Politburo. And the only other member of the Politburo concerned with foreign affairs, Foreign Trade Minister A. I. Mikoyan, has also been replaced. Thus, the "bourgeois" world has been cut off from direct contact with the Politburo.

These facts suggest an obvious conclusion. The Kremlin has abandoned hope of gaining its ends by diplomatic means, and the role of Foreign Minister will therefore revert to what it was before 1939, while the great effort to prepare the Soviet Union for war will be redoubled. Meanwhile, the Communist parties will abandon the attempt to build a mass following and so to gain power by legal or semi-legal means. Instead, a hard core of "revolutionary elite," an absolutely dependable instrument of Soviet policy, will resort to whatever illegal tactics may be necessary to weaken the non-Soviet world, and ultimately to seize power by force.

All this is, of course, wholly speculative. The replacement of Molotov could simply mean that he is being groomed to succeed Stalin, or on the other hand that he is to be punished. Yet the theory outlined above is considered reasonable by those qualified to judge, and it fits the known facts. Under any circumstances, one thing is clear. The world, and this country in particular, will need cool courage and steady nerves for a long time to come.

WHAT DID THE RUSSIANS ASK GENERAL EISENHOWER?

When General Eisenhower visited Moscow after the fall of Berlin, Russian military experts repeatedly asked him one question: "How did you keep up supply?" This, of course, referred to the amazing speed with which the Allied armies moved across France.

Much of the answer lay in the ability of Allied aircraft (the great majority of them Douglas transports) to deliver 2000 tons of supplies daily to critical points at critical times.

Carrying on their superb wartime record, Douglas aircraft have been transporting as much as 5000 tons of supplies a day over the Berlin Air Lift. Yet this feat simply underlines the necessity for even larger, faster transport planes.

Today, as for the past quarter century, Douglas leads the way in pioneering transportation by air. Under construction now, for example, is the giant new Douglas DC-6A air freighter. Able to speed loads up to 30,000 lbs. at 300 mph—to take off or land at moderate-sized airfields—the DC-6A will make available to the military services a cargo plane capable of world-wide supply operations of unprecedented scope.

AMA Pledged Support of Medical Science Academy in Fight on Payroll Health Plan

Cincinnati, March 6 (AP).—Mac F. Cahal of Kansas City, executive secretary of the American Academy of General Practice, today pledged solid support of the American Medical Association fight against "socialized medicine."

Cahal, submitted his annual report to more than 2000 general practitioners at the opening of their convention here, said:

"A few groups of dissidents and malcontents within the profession have sought to weaken the AMA by criticizing it. The final outcome of the present Administration's drive to nationalize medicine under bueraucratic control will determine the system of political economy under which citizens of this country will live in the years to come."

Cahal said the year-old academy, which has 10,000 members, would support the AMA because the members feel that medical care paid for through taxes would be inferior and too costly.

"The American people now spend about 4 per cent of their income for medical and hospital services and receive the finest care to be found in the world," he said. "At the same time, Federal, State and local taxes are taking at least 30 per cent of their income.

"If Federal Administrator Oscar Ewing and President Truman have their way, the people will pay nothing for medical care, but another 10 or 12 per cent of their wages in taxes."

Scientist Flays U. S. Secrecy on Atom Subjects

New York, March 6 (AP).—Dr. Frank H. Spedding, director of the Atomic Research Institute of Iowa State College, said today "so much secrecy" on atomic subjects may hamper U. S. scientfiic progress.

"I feel we are in real danger of losing our world leadership in science and engineering," Spedding said, "if so much secrecy is placed upon atomic subjects as to seriously hamper our future progress in these fields."

Writing in the Pegasus magazine Spedding said the kind of atomic information that should be made public should be determined by "scientific and technical people" and not by "political and public pressure groups."

Transportation Faults Blamed in Meat Loss

The Nation lost 70 million pounds of meat in 1947 from animals who were killed, crippled or bruised while being transported for sale as beef or pork.

In all, 176 million pounds of meat went by the board during the year through these causes or because of disease.

H. R. Smith, general manager of the National Livestock Loss Prevention Board, yesterday told the Federated Animal Welfare Societies of the District, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia that greater care must be used in transporting livestock to market in order to cut these losses.

He cited as one of the largest factors in bruising, killing or crippling cattle the mixing of large and small animals in trucks. This practice, he said, frequently results in small animals being trampled to death. Smith urged use of partitions for mixed sizes of animals being transported either by truck or rail.

He declared that during 1946 calves either dead on arrival or condemned by inspectors for immaturity would have filled a stock train 5 miles long.

Mrs. Paul M. Twyne, a federation official, told those at the group's luncheon meeting yesterday that a number of instances of cruelty to livestock had been observed in nearby Virginia.

Delos E. Culver, president of the Defenders of Furbearers, who also addressed the session, urged his listeners not to buy furs unless they can be convinced the furbearing animals were killed in a humane manner. He said most fur ranchers use humane methods, but objected strenuously to the steel traps used by fur trappers throughout the hemisphere.

He said most fur ranchers use labels in their furs to indicate that no cruelty was used in killing the animals.

Capone Bet Link Broken, Is Claim

Sacramento, Calif., March 6 (AP). The State Commission on Organized Crime said today the Capone syndicate of Chicago controls a Nation-wide horse-racing news wire system serving illegal gambling—but that its network in California has been shattered.

Such news wires, it explained, carry race results to bookmakers—men who accept illegal bets on the horses.

The United States Ninth Circuit Court ordered Western Union to end its leased wire service to Continental Press February 14 The Continental Press network, which the commission said flashes racing information from all United States tracks to "horse parlors," was held to be:

"A framework reaching every sizable communitay in the country upon which a whole series of criminal rackets can be organized and operated."

The commission warned, however, there is still bookmaking in California—and that information is being increasingly carried on telephone lines.

Nation-wide telegraph systems carrying racing information were built up, it was contended, "by much bloodshed, violence, intimidation, bribery and corruption." Heads of bookmaking syndicates, it said, are among "the great and truly dangerous criminals of the present."

In a progress report to State officials, including Gov. Earl Warren, the commission insists:

"It is a fact, which should never be overlooked or forgotten, that no matter what organization or persons may front for the racing news service, in dealing with the 'wire service' in California today we are in reality dealing with the Capone syndicate and its agents."

It said the Chicago Crime Commission had helped make that fact plain.

The California commission, set up by Warren to investigate organized crime, is headed by retired Admiral William H. Standley, of San Diego. It will make its final report by July 1.

The commission said those involved in California are mere agents of the Eastern syndicate chiefs who live peacefully and luxuriously—fearing only the ambition and competition of rival mobsters.

Regarding use of telephone instead of telegraph wires to send racing information, the report said:

"In a certain community there appear to be almost 300 telephones, concentrated in a comparatively small area, devoted to this business."

Monthly bills on a single phone were said to range as high as $2000.

The commission reported it had caught Continental trying to resume service under another name—the Illinois News Association.

It recommended that the Federal Communications Commission follow the California Public Utilities Commission in requiring all communication companies to refuse illegal service.

Continental formerly was owned largely by James M. Ragen of Chicago. He was shot from ambush and died two months later—in August, 1946—amid a welter of charges that the Capone syndicate was attempting to muscle in.

Ragen's ambushers were never caught, and the rumors of gang warfare in the race syndicates received fresh impetus when Bugsy Siegel, onetime public enemy, was slain in similar fashion almost a year later, in Beverly Hills, Calif. Siegel, whose killers likewise are still free, was reputed to have been West Coast representative for the syndicate wire service in its battle with Ragen.

Husband Dug Up

Widow Feels Better After Witchcraft

Altoona, Pa., March 6 (AP).—The "hexed" widow of an Army veteran today was reported recovering from the "spell" cast on her by her dead husband.

The strange story of Twentieth Century witchcraft came to light with the disclosure of Bedford County authorities that they had given permission to exhume the body of Pvt. Reuben Rock, 29.

Arthur Dively, father of the comely widow, Mrs. Rosella Rock, 22, readily told of weird ceremonies at the reopened grave February 22.

Uniform Set Afire

The United States Army uniform in which Reuben had been buried was stripped from the body, splashed with gasoline and burned. Salt was sprinkled on the body to ward off evil spirits. The corpse then was wrapped in a clean white sheet and returned to its resting place.

Thus, declared Dively, was Rosella freed of the "spell" that had gripped her and brought her close to a nervous breakdown.

Reuben Rock died January 13 of tuberculosis. He was buried January 16 in a cemetery in the mountainous district near his home.

But, according to Dively, the "restless spirit" of Reuben returned from the grave to torment the young wife who had been so deeply devoted to him.

Began to Waste Away

Rosella could not eat or sleep. She began to waste away. Her parents became convinced Reuben had practiced witchcraft by charming Rosella's picture.

"Reuben was saved at the end," Mrs. Dively said. "But he still had strange books and things in his house. Rosella was just crazy to be with him. She would go to him at any time."

The picture was found and destroyed. Reuben's ghost still hovered in the house, Dively said.

"We could even feel it right in the room with us. It knocked at the windows and screamed over the top of the house."

Then the family decided it had been a mistake to bury Reuben in his Army uniform. He had given the uniform to Rosella. It had been her dearest possession.

Since the uniform was burned, Dively said, the noises have ceased and Rosella is returning to health.

Delay Is Seen On Civil Rights

Growing higher each day the Southerners continue their filibuster, Senator Lucas (D., Ill.) warned again last night that it may be necessary to hold Congress in session well beyond the July 31 deadline now contemplated., Lucas Democratic majority leader, also announced that the Senate would recess today in tribute to Senator J Melville Broughton (D., N. C.), who died yesterday.

The majority leader repeated that the Administration forces were continuing to sincerely break the Southern filibuster. He promised last week to demand night sessions starting Tuesday.

Whether the Democratic leaders can break the Southern talkfest or not, it appeared virtually certain that the Administration will have to postpone until early summer any attempt to put through its civil rights program.

Although the current filibuster is aimed at Administration attempts to pave the way for the civil rights program by tightening the Senate's "gag" rule each of the civil rights measures undoubtedly will come in for extensive debate before a vote can be taken.

Meanwhile, the House continued to bite into its legislative budget while the Senate shuffled through hours of tedious debate. Before the House this week is expected to be the "spy bill" establishing the Central Intelligence Agency with permanent powers and permitting it to bring into the United States aliens who have helped this Nation in espionage.

Both the House and Senate will continue to prepare legislation in committees, although the most Senate groups must adjourn at noon to permit members to attend the filibuster sessions.

Rousing Show Staged By Cossacks

By Richard Keith

The Don Cossack Chorus gave one of its rousing shows yesterday afternoon at Constitution Hall. The concert was one of the best-attended Sunday afternoon events of the season.

For many years this venerable group of male singers has been touring the United States and it is still as popular as ever. Due to the steadily advancing average age of the ensemble, some of its original spriteliness and precision is no longer there, but its dynamic little conductor, Serge Jaroff, still holds the standards of performance high.

A group of Russian religious pieces opened the program. Although most of them are not great music, they sound very profound when delivered by the rich, organ-like voices of this chorus. Introduced into this group for no apparent reason was a wretched arrangement of the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria." Could it possibly have been some misguided business manager's idea of charming the public?

The second group, which began with a tasteless potpourri of Tchaikowsky tunes (business manager again?), closed with four spirited Russian songs, neatly sung, and a dance, neatly danced.

Russian peasant and army songs made up the last section of the program, which was altered to include the famous Red Marching Song. The finest solo singing of the afternoon came from Mr. Levchenko and Mr. Bolotine in the popular gypsy song "Two Guitars." The audience enthusiastically called for encores and got them. It is disheartening to have to report that the first of these was an arrangement of the Song of India with special solo effects which resembled a kazoo.

Perhaps the most distinguishing characteristic of the Don Cossacks is their ability to produce a sound which is perfectly blended but which at the same time preserves to a degree the individual timbre of each singer.

Also laudable is Conductor Jaroff's policy of not exclusively featuring one or two soloists. Yesterday afternon, almost half of the 20-odd singers sang alone at least once.

It is to be hoped that, in the future, the Don Cassocks will abandon this new urge to sing popular transcriptions and will return to doing what they are best at—Russian liturgical and folk music.

'Theater' Lists 3 One-Act Plays, Marionette Show

The next program of the Children's Theater of Washington, sponsored by the D. C. Recreation Department, will be the "Playbill," a group of three one-act plays, and the Rufus Rose Marionettes show.

The plays are "The Hick," by Leslie Amouri, who will direct young actors from the section west of Rock Creek Park; "Sunday Costs Five Pesos," by Joseph Niggli, directed by John B. Wentworth and acted by Northeast section representatives, and "Apartment for Rent," an original play by 16-year-old Sheila Goldstein, acted by Southeast players and directed by Mrs. Ethel Louise Smith of the Anacostia High School staff.

Tickets for the performances are on sale at Snow's Concert Bureau, 1108 G st. nw., at 60 cents each. The Rufus Rose Marionettes will be staged at various high schools on April 19, 20, 21 and 22.

The Road to Rio Lures U.S. Actors

By Richard L. Coe

PEOPLE OF THE THITTAH: James S. Elliott is a young man in a hurry who is slowing down to a cautious gallop . . . Jim has achieved a curious sort of fame as the Nation's youngest theatrical producer; he's only 25 now and in 1942 he presented "Arleen," the first of what's not been an impressive list of shows . . . But he's a fiery little guy (David Garrick was, too) and he's gotten terrific Broadway backing for what should be a smart venture . . . He's formed the Pan-American Players and hopes to take off on the first of an annual series of 10-week air visits to the capitals of Central and South America . . . He's got whang-dang approval from such folk as Lee Shubert, Arthur Hopkins, Lawrence Langner, Helen Hayes, Katharine Cornell, John Golden and gosh knows who else . . . On his board of directors are Moss Hart, Clarence Derwent, Max Gordon and Joseph M. Hyman . . . Jim's down here whipping up the interest of Ambassadors from the south, who've realized what a fine thing it would be for American actors to play in Latin America, of whose 27,000,000 it's estimated 19 per cent speak English.

MOST THEATERS where a visiting company of the better Broadway and Hollywood people would play are Government owned, so the blessings of the diplomats and their home offices are important . . . Our singers and dancers are well known down there, argues Elliott, why shouldn't a company playing such a thing as "Our Town" be a splendid example of the American culture the rest of the world knows too little about? . . . Tennessee Williams, Kaufman and Hart, William Saroyan are others who've said they'd be honored to have their plays done before Good Neighbor audiences . . . Jim's spent two years on this project, hopes to get his troupe off for the next winter season, which means August . . . From the looks of things this is getting out of the blueprint stage . . . Richard Whorf and Paula Lawrence are ready to pack.

JO LOMBARDI is a fellow well-known to the Warner and, rightly enough, he'll be in the pit when the Jack Carson show takes over the stage for the week beginning Friday . . . Jo came to the Warner, then the Earle, in 1937 as a guest conductor, but it was a Big Thing from the start and he stayed in the pit till the house gave up variety . . . Since then Jo's been over at I. J. Rappaport's Hippodrome, Baltimore, but they've given him time off to come back for an old home week . . . Welcome home, Jo; we'll be seeing you Friday.

SPIKE JONES, who'll be destroying Constitution Hall this weekend, has a word of advice for those who attended last week's conference in New York on the state (sad) of the theater . . . 'What's to be done to revive the road?" someone asks, which is all Spike needed . . . "Jus' go out on the road and find out," cries the sharp tack . . . That's what he's been doing for some time now and filling houses all along the way.

LUCIA CHASE, who was pretty discouraged last fall about the inability of her and Oliver Smith's Ballet Theater to pay its expenses, has taken heart again, good news for all . . . Ballet Theater will give one performance only at Constitution Hall Saturday night, the 19th, with Nora Kaye, the great Youskevitch, Nana Gollner, Hugh Laing, John Kriza and Marie Tallchief as the principals in a company of 100 . . . Considering the recent three-night sell-outs of Ballet Russe at the huge hall, this should be one more indication to the managerial world that there's an audience OUTSIDE of Gotham, by the way, Ballet Theater will begin a three-week season Easter night . . . Seats here are at Mrs. Stabler's in Lubar's, 1300 G st.

FRANK M BOUCHER caught the unelegant version of "The Secret Land" at an American University screening the other night and promptly tied it up for his K-B theaters . . . This is a 65-minute black and white version of the fascinating Technicolored version released by Metro for commercial theaters . . . Telling of Admiral Byrd's '45-'46 trip to the pole, it presents the admiral's own narration . . . This version of "The Secret Land" is called "Discovery" and you'll see it next week at the Apex, Naylor and Senator theaters.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., March 6.—Clark Griffith, the teetotaler who won't even sell beer in his ball park, is on the verge of exposing his ball club to a bad pun. Any day soon, you're apt to read that along about the fourth or fifth inning the Washington club has switched to Calvert.

Calvert reached the Nats' training camp in bulk the other day—180 pounds of it. He's Paul Calvert, a righthander who wears glasses, and used to pitch for Toronto, Baltimore, Cleveland, Atlanta, and took a fling at the outlaw leagues in Havana and Mexico.

POVICH

Right now, Calvert is bonded to no club, and after watching him throw the ball in practice Manager Joe Kuhel's mouth is watering more than slightly at the prospect of getting him on the payroll. Right now, Kuhel is importuning the Nats' front office "not to let him get away."

The pitching situation being what it is on the Washington club, Kuhel has been properly impressed with the zip of Calvert's fast ball and the depths of his sinker. He's so impatient to display Calvert to the nabobs of the Washington club's treasury department he'll start him in the club's first exhibition game of the spring on Saturday against the Athletics, at Palm Beach.

CALVERT IS A FREE agent, but the Nats aren't going to get him for free when and if they try to sign him. There's the little matter of Calvert's investment in himself plus his duty by some faithful friends, who took a bit of a gamble to make Calvert available to the Nats.

You see, he bought his release from the Toronto club for $1500 at the end of last season. Actually he was strapped for cash at the time, and borrowed the money from a circle of friends in Montreal. They put $1500 worth of faith in his ability to sell himself to a big league club, and in the Washington camp Calvert is something of a pitching firm.

They gave him locker room space in Orlando, and a uniform, and said they'd look at his stuff. Kuhel has seen enough of the latter to recommend him already, but there will be a bit of haggling before Calvert signs any document. He won't sign for a nickle less than a $5000 bonus, and is determined to get himself and his pals at least a 300 per cent return on their investment.

HE WAS AROUND for a full season with Cleveland in 1945 before being sold to Toronto, and when the latter club switched him to Atlanta he bolstered his income by playing in the Havana winter leagues. Because outlaw players were in the same league, Calvert was blacklisted from organized ball. So he jumped to Mexico.

They weren't paying fancy salaries in Mexico in 1947, but between summer baseball in Mexico and winter ball in Cuba he did all right. The Cuban outlaw league was giving the approved winter league a hard time of it, and the latter induced Calvert and others to jump the outlaws after clearing the way for their reinstatement into organized ball.

He reverted to Toronto last season and it was nice he says, to get the feel of an official ball again. In both Mexico and Cuba a pitcher was never sure that he would throw the same type of ball all afternoon. "In Mexico, thev'd start a game using a ball with raised stitches, and the next one they'd throw in was apt to be so slick you couldn't grip it. You'd throw your curve ball and it would be straight as a string."

SATURDAY'S GAME with the Athletics will be the important one for Calvert. He'll get his $5000 if he does well, and a lot less if he doesn't. Anyway, the Nats will be starting a pitcher who isn't officially on the roster. But he has something special going for him. He has been pitching in the Cuban leagues all winter and his arm is ready and he'll be levelling.

Kuhel is in no mood to reject any pitcher who can pitch a little bit, and Calvert apparently came to the right club to peddle his wares.

"He has showed me a sinker ball I have to like," said Kuhel. "That's a wonderful pitch for a relief pitcher. Look who the good relief pitchers were. Wiley Moore, Jack Russell and Ray Caldwell. They make the hitters drill the ball into the ground. With men on bases it's the pitch that sets up double plays. That's how Washington won its last pennant in 1933. We won it behind Jack Russell, who'd walk in with men on bases, throw that sinker, and everybody would be out."

Joe Blackwood Tackles Tough Georgie Hill in Bout Tonight

Joe Blackwood, Washington's main claimiant to fistic honors since moving here recently, gets what is expected to be a severe test tonight as he takes on George Hill of Philadelphia in the 10-round middleweight feature of the boxing card at Turner's Arena.

The transplanted New Yorker, with three straight wins in local matches, will be meeting a classy ringman who took his measure in a previous meeting in Salem, Mass. It was reportedly one of the best scraps staged in Salem.

Three Wins in Row

Since taking up residence in Washington the 21-year-old Blackwood has whipped Ken Stribling, Al Wright and Chet Vinci, the last two in less than three months.

If he can get past Hill he is hoping for a May 2 date at Griffith Stadium with Marcel Cerdan.

A $10,000 offer to Cerdan for the bout was recently made by Matchmaker Gabe Menendez.

Hill has licked a number of good boys, including Randy Brown and Charlie Milan, and has never made a bad fight.

Blackwood has wins over Coley Welch and Al Priest, and a pair of draws with New England's double titleholder, Ralph Zanelli, to his credit.

The wild man of local boxing, Danny Petro, is paired in an eight-round semifinal against Cincinnati's Jackie Goode.

Terps, Navy Open Grid Drills Today

Regardless of the calendar which says Spring doesn't commence until March 21, it'll start at 3 P. M. today at Annapolis and College Park where Navy and Maryland, respectively, open spring football drills.

George Washington opens up a day later at the usual Frog Island skirmish grounds. Georgetown, with new coach, Bob Margarita at the helm, joins the Big Four next Monday. Each school will devote approximately six weeks to spring sessions.

Vollmer, Simmons Please Nats

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Orlando, Fla., March 6.—Clyde Vollmer rapped for attention in the Washington training camp today—by rapping the ball to the far distances of left field to leave a nice impression with the employment office.

Big Vollmer, there are 190 pounds of him, is one of the chaps on the fringe of an outfield job with the Nats. He came up nicely recommended from Syracuse, where he whacked 32 home runs in the International League and was runner-up also in the runs-batted-in department.

It was his finest year of the 10 he has put in at baseball and the Nats bought him for $30,000. They gambled that much after the Cincinnati Reds turned him down. He was the Reds' property for nine years but somehow he didn't impress them despite their long-felt need for hitting outfielders.

In the Nats' camp Vollmer found as his roommate a young man named John Simmons, who is also sharing manager Joe Kuhel's attention as an outfielder candidate. In fact, there is some belief that young Simmons may be the more proficient fellow.

Vollmer on "Vet Team"

Simmons also smote the ball hard today in his first day in uniform. They drafted him from Montreal where he was a .304 hitter in the same league in which Vollmer hit .291.

Simmons is in the big leagues for the first time, but he's an old pro—in basketball. He played with the Boston Celtics along with his elongated brother, Connie Simmons, who is now a mainstay of the Baltimore Bulets. In another year, he hopes, he'll graduate from New York U., where he is a classmate of the Nats' Eddie Yost.

Kuhel divided his roster into two hitting squads today and it may be significant that he placed Vollmer with the so-called first squad. In that group als are Buddy Lewis, the only outfielder with a job clinched, and Eddie Stewart and Gil Coan who will be contesting Vollmer tnd Simmons for the vacant posts.

Outfielder Sherrard Robertson was dropped to the second squad of hitters along with Simmons and their rookie outfielders, Jay Didani, Lou Bevil and Harold Jeller.

The workouts moved into high gear today with Kuhel sending seven pitchers to the mound—Ray Scarborough, Ed Klieman, Walter Masterson, Forrest Thompson, Laul Calvert and the rookies, Bill Dozier and Dick Welteroth.

Actually there's a shortage of pitchers with only 14 in camp—in contrast to previous years when the total hit as high as 22. . . . Because of it, Kuhel has dispensed with the traditional intra-squad games before the exhibition season opens . . . Mark Christman has happily accepted his new role as third base coach-utility man . . . Sam Dente and John Simmons are the bridegrooms of the squad. . . . Out of uniform, Eddie Yost and Al Kozar look like fugitives from junior high schools . . . Sid Hudson is suffused with happiness on two counts (1) his arm registers no sign of its 1948 soreness and (2) he carded a neat 77 on the golf course yesterday. . . . Vollmer isn't in a Washington uniform for the first time. He joined the club last fall in time to play one game before the season ended. He whacked out two hits against the Athletics.

Majeski Clouts Homer for A's

West Palm Beach, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Hank Majeski clouted a 365-foot home run to lead Al Simmons, regulars to a 3-1 victory over Jimmy Dykes' newcomers in the Philadelphia Athletics' first intra-squad game today.

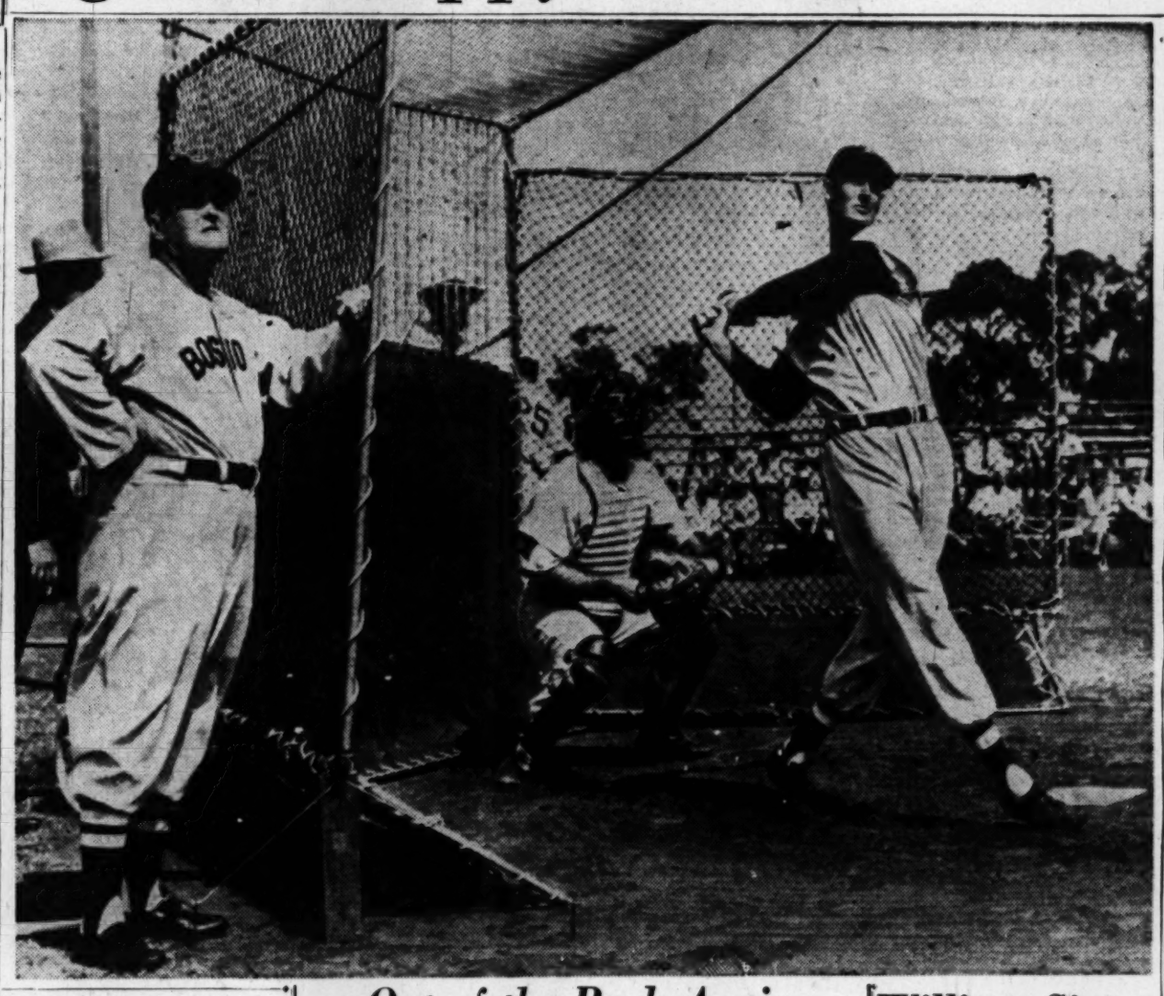
Joe Coleman, who hurled the last two innings of the five-inning game, was the victim of Majeski's game-winning blow. Majeski also collected the only hit allowed by Southpaw Lou Brissie during the first three innings.

Reese's Team Wins

Vero Beach, Fla., March 6 (U.P.). Pee Wee Reese's Colonels took undisputed possession of first place in the Dodgertown League today by trouncing Eddie Miksis Jerseys, 9 to 2, on O'Mally Field.

Erv Palica, Rex Barney, Frank Laga hurled hitless ball for the winners with Rookie Gino Cimoli's single off George Brown in the ninth the lone hit for Miksis, nine. However, Barney suffered one of his typical wild spells, permitting two runs on four walks and a wild pitch.

'Jumpers' Reportedly Will Bring Suit Against Happy Chandler for 5 Million



10 Players Will Charge Livelihood Taken Away

St. Louis, March 6 (AP).—The Post-Dispatch said today that 10 major league baseball players who jumped to the Mexican League several years ago plan to file suits against Commissioner A. B. Chandler. Amount of the proposed suits was estimated at five million dollars.

The 10 players were reported ready to file the suit against Chandler because he has failed to lift a five-year ban against them for jumping organized baseball contracts and playing in the "outlaw" Mexican League.

The newspaper added that the players will base their suits on the contention that Chandler has barred them from earning a livelihood.

'Substantially True,' Says Players' Lawyer

New York, March 6 (U.P.).—Attorney John L. Flynn of New York tonight described as "substantially true" reports that he was preparing a five-million-dollar damage suit against Baseball Commissioner A. B. Chandler on behalf of players under suspension for jumping to the Mexican League.

"I wish I could tell you more than that now," said Flynn at his home, "but I would only be hurting the boys." Flynn refused to elaborate on the report at all and would give no details about the suit, where it would be filed or when.

At Tampa, Fla., Chandler said he had no comment.

The newspaper said its information came from a player who refused to permit his name to be used.

John L. Flynn, New York attorney, admitted that he is acting in behalf of the players, the Post-Dispatch said.

The players reported to be involved are Max Lanier and Fred Martin, pitchers, and Lou Klein, infielder, St. Louis Cardinals; Luis Olmo, outfielder, Brooklyn Dodgers; Sol Maglie, Harry Feldman and Ace Adams, pitchers, and Roy Zimmerman and George Hausmann, infielders, New York Giants, and Myron Hayworth, catcher, who played with the St. Louis Browns and Toledo club in the American Association.

Zimmerman, at his home in Tremont, Pa., denied he was in the group that planned to file the suits.

"I was approached by a New York attorney named Flynn," Zimmerman said. "But I decided not to go along with the plan."

Zimmerman played third base for the Giants in 1945 and was in the club in the spring of the following year before jumping to the Mexican League.

All the players were suspended by Chandler for five years following their jump to the Mexican League.

Mickey Owen, former Brooklyn Dodger catcher who also is under suspension, has attempted to persuade the players not to file the suit, the Post-Dispatch said. Owens was reported to believe that Chandler will reinstate them voluntarily if he is not pressed.

According to the Post-Dispatch, President George V. McLaughlin of the Brooklyn Bank and Trust Co., was asked to intervene in an attempt to settle with Chandler out of court for the ouster of Owen and Olmo.

Chandler banned all league-jumping players from organized baseball for five years after the Mexican League's "raid" in 1946.

Some baseball observers believe Chandler was considering reinstating the banned players until Danny Gardella's suit against baseball which was filed in New York several weeks ago. After the Gardella suit, Chandler said he would not relent on the five-year ban.

A FAMILIAR SIGHT—In his first spring workout at the Boston Red Sox' Sarasota (Fla.) training camp, Ted Williams looks like the same slugger who has wrecked American League pitching for years. Manager Joe McCarthy follows the ball with his eyes as Terrible Ted follows through after whacking one of Boo Ferriss' pitches. The catcher is Matty Batts.

Cooper Wins Florida Golf On Last Hole

By F. T. MacFeely

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6 (AP). Pete Cooper rammed home an eagle three on the last hole to win the $10,000 St. Petersburg golf open today with a 72-hole total of 275.

The Florida champion and the man the experts said would fold up under final round pressure canned an eight-foot putt after his second shot had found the green beautifully down hill from the cup on the 484-yard par five eighteenth.

Hamilton, Palmer Have 277

He had to put that one down to get his victory and the top $2000.

For Carey Middlecoff, the Memphis dentist, had just sank one for a birdie that gave him 276 over the 72-hole tournament distance.

Cooper, the Ponte Vedra Beach pro, was out in 38 but put on a terriffic three-three-three finish for 33 on the par 35 back nine of the 6260-yard Pasadena course.

His 275 total for the four rounds was nine under par.

Johnny Palmer of Badin, N. C., who was tied with Cooper for the halfway lead and one stroke back after yesterday's play, had come in a few minutes earlier with a 72 for the day and 277 for the tourney.

Mangrum Top Winner

Bob Hamilton, playing pro at Prince Georges Country Club in Maryland, matched the 67 that gave him the first round lead and had been the first one in with 277.

As Cooper and Middlecoff teed off on the eighteenth both knew they needed par to match the 277 scores. They held up under the pressure in great shape to sneak in for first and second.

Lloyd Mangrum, little Chicago sharpshooter, gathered $287.50 out of the tournament to take over first place in the year's money winnings. He had been second to Jimmy Demaret, Ojai, Calif., who did not enter here.

Even Bartels Will Be Back

It'll Take Anti-Trust Law To Bust N. C. State Monopoly

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The prospect of breaking North Carolina State's monopoly on the Southern Conference basketball championship is as bright as a foggy night in London.

Every member of the Wolfpack team which defeated George Washington Saturday to win the title for the third straight year returns next season. But that ain't all, brother. Dick Bartels, hot-shot forward who dropped out of school in December, rejoins the Hoosier Hot Shots for the 1949-50 campaign.

Also, the Wolfpack's freshman basketball team, rated the best in the Conference this season, will send up at least three players to bolster a squad which is bulging with muscles now.

Regardless of whether the conference decides to continue its eight-team tournament or switch to a 16-game scramble, it's still safe to write that the Raleigh Rebels will survive the pack. They're not a great ball club, but they're good enough to win the Southern Conference title for a fourth straight time.

COACH EVERETT CASE, of the Wolfpack, was voted the tourney's outstanding mentor by sports writers, but he owes his honor to a slightly red-faced Washington reporter whose name appears over this story. The reporter forgot to turn in his ballot, which had been marked for George Garber, of GW. Case won the award by one vote, 12-11. This reporter's vote would have tied the balloting. Sorry George.

Chet Giermak, of William and Mary, was chosen the outstanding performer and the W. and M. star didn't need this reporter's vote to win the title. He did it by himself Friday night when he scored a record-breaking 36 points as GW defeated William and Mary, 78-74, in that dramatic triple-overtime thriller.

N. C. STATE'S ALL-COURT press against GW in the second half was a perfectly timed maneuver. Seeing that the Colonials were tired after that W. & M game, Coach Case waited until early in the second half to press them.

GW's strategy was to conserve its energy by bringing the ball up court slowly as it didn't have the strength to employ a fast-break. When State began pressing, the Colonials simply didn't have the strength to fast-break their way out and fell easy victims of the Wolfpack.

The Colonials were so tired after their memorable victory over W. & M. the night before that Gene Witkin, sparkling guard, sat down on the court whenever a player stepped up to the free throw line to shoot two foul shots.

New York, March 6 (U.P.).—The tournament of champions announced today that its return middleweight title fight between Champion Marcel Cerdan and former Champ Tony Zale will be held in June, instead of April as originally planned.

It was explained that Zale would not be able to get into peak condition until the first or second week in June.

Minneapolis, March 6 (AP).—Held without a basket for all but 30 seconds of the first period, the Minneapolis Lakers eventually pulled out a 68 to 59 victory over Providence in the Basketball Association of America tonight.

Providence led the Lakers for the first 32 minutes of the game and lost only in the final minutes as Arnie Ferrin provided the spark for the Lakers. George Mikan with 21 points led the Lakers.

WilliamsSigns, Says He May Quit by 1951

Sarasota, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Ted Williams, reported to be getting around $100,000 for 1949, today went through the formality of signing a Boston Red Sox contract as he reiterated his intention of quitting after the 1951 season.

The 31-year-old American League batting champion told newsmen that he will "step out as soon as I feel I have enough money to take life easy."

"I say 1951 now," Williams said. "It may be sooner, might be later."

"I like baseball, but your life isn't your own when you're engaged in it," he explained, "I want to start living my own life just as soon as I can afford it."

At the same time, General Manager Joe Cronin announced that Outfielder Stan Spence, listed as the club's lone holdout, came to terms during a morning conference. Terms of the contract were not announced.

Heavy Hitting

Clearwater, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Gran Hamner, Dick Sisler and Bert Haas all struck first-round blows in the battle for infield spots on the Philadelphia Phillies today as Cooke's Comets defeated the Bengough Blasters, 14-2, in the first intra-camp game.

Hamner hit the jackpot with five hits in five trips to the plate, including a home run and a double. He drove in five runs and scored four himself. Sisler got himself three hits in four trips to the plate, including a double and a triple, and drove in three runs. Haas led the Bengough attack with two hits, including a home run

Nervous? And How

Pheonix, Ariz., March 6 (AP).—In the first intrasquad game of the New York Giants today coach Fankie Frisch's boy defeated Herman Franks team, 10-9.

Much attention was centered on 18-year-old Ted Heidtschmidt, $20,000 bonus pitcher. The Chicago youngster was so nervous he walked six men, hit another and heaved a wild pitch in the 1 1-3 innings he was on the mound. But he did hold the Franks to one hit during the confusion.

DiMaggio Scares Yanks in 10 of 11 Seasons

1948 His Only Uninterrupted Year Although He Barely Limped Through

By Steve Snider

New York, March 6 (U.P.).—The big guy, Joe DiMaggio, is a hard-luck guy, too.

Illness, injury or ill-advised holdouts have played a strange part in the Yankee Clipper's spectacular baseball career. When his ailing heel kicked up in Florida, it was the tenth time in his 11 seasons that he scared the daylights out of himself and the New York Yankees.

DiMaggio has completed only one uninterrupted year—1948. And he limped through that one, from spring to fall, with assorted injuries that should have entitled him to a midseason rest if his explosive bat weren't needed urgently.

They call him a ball player's ball player, for all the glory and high wage he has won with the Yankees. Bad breaks came with the good ones and he didn't moan.

Joltin' Joe knew a lot of medicos by their first names even before the Yankees brought him from San Francisco. The Yanks were gambling, in fact, when they made the deal. A year earlier, 1934, Joe stepped out of a jitney cab in San Francisco and pulled several knee tendons which threatened to end his career then and there.

Joe's troubles with the Yankees started almost immediately. Shortly after reporting in Florida in 1936 for his rookie campaign, he twisted a foot. When he sat too long under a diathermy lamp, his foot was burned seriously and he missed most of spring training, plus the first 17 games of the season.

In '37, he had pains in his right shoulder during training and that wasn't settled until he had his tonsils yanked in mid-April.

Missed several league games.

Dimagio hurt himself in '38 with his stubborn holdout for $40,000 when the Yankees were interested in paying him only $25,000. Ed Barrow won that squabble for the front-office, but DiMag lost the entire spring and the first 12 days of the regular schedule.

New York Gambled on Injured Knee When They Bought Joe Up in '36

And so to 1939, in which he missed 34 games because of a foot injury received in a collision with Joe Gordon while chasing a pop fly. In 1940, a bad knee and a charley horse kept him out of 22 games. Missed 15 games with the same stuff in 1941.

The year 1942 wound up all right but he gave the Yanks a terrific scare in Florida. His throwing arm simply wouldn't function. As quickly as the ailment came, however, it disappead in time for the opener and he went 154 games.

The Army had him for the next three seasons but he celebrated his return in 1946 by missing a month of the campaign with a knee injury resulting from a faulty slide into third base at Philadelphia.

Along about this time, Larry MacPhail began to put his charges under the X-ray machines to see what he could see. He discovered DiMaggio had bone spurs on both heels. Joe had the left heel operated on in 1947—missed training, first week of season.

He had an arm operation for removal of bone chips after the 1947 World Series but it healed perfectly. He went the distance in the 1948 season.

Operation on the other heel is the current distress. What's next?

Eddie Dyer Predicts a 3-Way Race

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of stories on prospects of major league teams for the coming season.

By Joe Reichler

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6 (AP)—Manager Eddie Dyer of the St. Louis Cardinals today predicted a three-way scrap for the National League pennant among the defending champion Boston Braves, Brooklyn and his own Redbirds.

Describing his aggregation as an "if" club, the soft-spoken skipper said his team could cop the flag providing "Howie Pollet and Red Munger regain their winning form, Whitey Kurowski's arm operation proves successful, Red Schoendienst stays in the line-up regularly, if we can find a centerfield replacement for Terry Moore, and come up with some strength on the bench."

"This league has tightened up considerably," he said. "There isn't very much difference between seven of the eight clubs. If the Cincinnati Reds don't lose the services of Ewell Blackwell, they'll be tough to beat, too.

"The Braves, however, appear to me as the team to beat for the pennant," he continued, "providing Pete Reiser comes through for them. He doesn't have to be the Reiser of 1941 when he won nearly every offensive honor including the batting title. Even a Reiser of '46 or '47 could win the flag for Boston.

Kurowski Could Mean a Lot

Dyer was optimistic over the condition of his "cripples" of 1948.

"Take a look at that Kurowski," he beamed. "Look how streamlined he is. He has gone on a diet and shed 25 pounds. He also tells me he has no after-effects from the elbow operation he underwent during the winter. He says he can throw as hard as he ever did.

"Do you know what a difference that could make to the ball club? Last year, Kurowski, hampered by a bad wing, hit only two home runs and drove in only 33 compared to 27 home runs and 104 RBI's in 1947. Schoendienst also looks better than he ever looked since I've been manager of the club. He has gained 15 pounds and appears stronger."

Dyer said Pollett and Munger, slow to get started last year because of arm operations in the winter of 1947, have been firing the ball over with their old time gusto. He expects them to team up with Harry (the Cat) Brecheen and Al Brazle to form the big four.

Stan (the Man) Musial and Enos (Country) Slaughter are as solid as the Rock of Gibraltar in the outfield and Marty Marion, heavier and healthier looking, is the same old octopus at shortstop. Nippy Jones, a holdover, and Glen Nelson of Rochester will fight it out at first; Del Rice and Joe Garagiola will share the catching burden, and no less than seven flychasers will battle for the centerfield post.

Veteran Ron Northey, second only to Musial in batting last year; Erv Dusak, and Ed Sauer, drafted from Los Angeles where he hit .305, are the leading contenders. Others in the battle include Hal Rice and Chuck Diering, Rochester grads; Larry Miggins, Omaha, and Sid Langston, a .320 hitter from St. Joseph.

Reed, Nichols Win Casting

The National Capital Casting Club yesterday staged the first of a series of eliminations to pick two five-man teams to represent Washington in intercity competition with Hagerstown and Baltimore next Sunday at the Sportsmen's Show at the Armory.

Yesterday's winners were Jay Reed with a score of 94 in the 5/8 plug casting, and Perry Nichols, also with a 94, in the dry fly casting. Eliminations will be held throughout the week.

Sugar Radio Wins Again

Sugar Radio stayed in first place in the Washington Suburban Soccer League by defeating the Charles County booters, 3-0, yesterday.

In other games Osia defeated Glasva, 6-2; Maryland Sports Club downed Marlboro, 2-1; Pan American won over Washington French, 4-2, and Rockville beat Indian Head, 4-1.

Presidents Then Seek State Crown

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Although most of the other basketball teams have packed their uniforms away in mothballs, George Washington High of Alexandria is just beginning its most important phase of the season.

Tonight at 8:30 at Ritchie Coliseum, the undefeated Presidents tangle with Central for the Metropolitan Washington Tournament championship.

Then, regardless of tonight's outcome, GW and Washington-Lee of Arlington leave for Norfolk, where on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, they go after the Virginia State championship.

However, the Presidents are concerned with first things first. Their immediate foe is Central, the Interhigh champion with 18 wins and only 6 losses.

Pursuing their twenty-third straight victory, the Alexandrians are faced with a tough fight. In a previous meeting this year, at Central, GW barely squeezed by the Vikings, 39-38, on Billy Smith's hook shot with 11 seconds left to play.

Central has improved since that game too, having been reinforced by Lou Glickfield, a slick Ball-handling New Yorker who splendiddly complements the driving, sharpshooting tactics of Jimmy Pantos.

G. W. and Central met in the semifinals of last year's Metro tournament, and Central scored an upset victory. G W. hasn't forgotten that Pantos set a tourney record in that game with 31 points.

The Presidents have three classy ballplayers themselves in Jim Gahagan, Tony Daukas and Billy Smith, who put Central at a disadvantage in the height department. Six- foot 2-inch Gahagan is an excellent ball-handler, and 6-foot 5-inch Daukas and 6-foot 1-inch Smith, are deadly hook shot artists.

G. W. advanced to the tournament finals by beating Wilson, 53-40, and Gonzaga, 41-38. Central made the championship round by routing Hyattsville, 53-39, and upsetting St. John's, 33-30.

The hotly contested Catholic High championship is decided Wednesday night at Uline Arena where Gonzaga and St. John's meet for the third time. They split in their two previous meetings.

Quarters K Wins First Round Game From Heavy Tank

The Prince Georges Invitational basketball tournament opened yesterday at Hyattsville (Md.) Armory with the Quarters K Navy team featuring action in a 64-30 triumph over National Guard Heavy Tanks.

The individual scoring champion of the day was Ben Harrell, Washington Gas forward, who hung up 22 futile points as the team lost to Snug Harbor, 67-57. In other games Cavalier turned back F. B. I., 53-42, and 1830 Club whipped Washington Post of the V. F. W., 43-24.

Tonight's schedule, starting at 7:30, pits G. P. O. against Epworth, Mullikin against Memorial American Legion, and Hyattsville against Calvary. A total of 20 teams are in the two-defeat-and-out tourney.

Oxon Hill Trot Track Begins Work On Grandstand

Construction of the streamlined grandstand for the $600,000 Rosecroft Raceway at Oxon Hill, Md., will begin early this week with the arrival of steel from Bethlehem, Pa., William E. Miller, president, announced yesterday.

The track opens May 26 for 20 nights of racing.

Already the new clubhouse of cinder block and steel is beginning to take shape, and there is every indication, the Rosecroft president stated, that both grandstand and clubhouse will be completed far in advance of the grand opening. The grandstand will seat 4000 and 20,000 can be accomodated at the track.

In addition to the regular half-mile oval, there will also be a mile track for training and jogging purposes.

Touchdowners' Guest Is Bear

Featured performers of the Sportsmen's and Outdoor show now at the Armory will be on hand for the Touchdown Club's luncheon today at 12:30 p. m. Rosie, the acrobatic bear, and her owner-trainer Beebe will entertain and Glenn L. Martin, president of the League of Maryland Sportsmen, will be the guest speaker.

Rosie will ride to and from her engagement in a taxicab and will be accompanied by Chief Henry Red Eagle, master of ceremonies of the show, as well as her trainer and Martin.

Armstrong High Defends Crown in North Carolina

Not content with the District Negro Interhigh and South Atlantic High basketball championships, Armstrong Tech will literally knock itself out trying to defend a title it won last year.

The tournament, a three-day affair March 17-19, is sponsored by the Fayetteville, N. C., State Teachers College, with 37 schools from six states and the District entered.

Last year, Armstrong drew a first round bye, and still had to win five games within 65 hours. It did too.

Schools are entered from Florida, North and South Carolina, West Virginia and Virginia. Armstrong is the only District representative.

Despite its 22-0 record, George Washington High of Alexandria will not be favored to win the Virginia basketball title at Norfolk, beginning Thursday. Lynchburg High, unbeaten in 19 games against a stronger schedule, is seeded first. Washington-Lee of Arlington runs into Lynchburg in the first round. GW's first round opponent is Roanoke High . . . According to the National High School Athletic Federation handbook, the District, along with California and Minnesota has the strictest scholastic eligibility requirements in the Nation. While most of the others require a minimum of only three passing grades, the D. C. makes four pasing marks mandatory for its up-to-par athlete.

The Big Brothers Club, sponsor of the All-High vs. All-Prep basketball game Saturday afternoon at Uline, has announced the rosters of its teams. On the high team are Jim Pantos and Jack Stringer of Central, Leo Speros and Jim Young of Wilson, Tony Sgro and Bob Curtis of McKinley Tech, Bucky Poston of Western, Ken Luxenberg of Coolidge, Franny Dyer of Eastern and Bob Zomsky of Roosevelt. On the prep squad are Tippy Larkins and Mike Nolan of Gonzaga, Bob McLindon, Bob McDonald and Don Kokes of St. John's, Tom Crowley and John O'Donnell of Georgetown Prep, Jack Duchesne of Priory, Roger Kingsbury of St. Albans and Lou Pennini of St. Anthony's. Highs open practice this afternoon at Central, while the Preps pitch camp at St. John's.

NCAA, NIT Tourneys Are Next

New York, March 6 (AP).—Officials running the two major post-season basketball tournaments bore a harried look today as the tourney dates approached with several big holes still to be filled in the play-off fields.

Most everything was expected to be settled by now but the boys in short pants still are battling for several league championships and the right to compete in the National Inviation tournament (March 12-14-17-19) and the NCAA championships.

The eastern NCAA tourney starts in New York, same site as the NIT, March 18. The Western NCAA playoffs will be held in Kansas City March 21-22 and the finals in Seattle, March 26.

Here's quick rundown of both tournaments:

N.I.T.—Kentucky, which won its sixth straight Southeastern Conference pennant last night by defeating Tulane, 68-52, St. Louis, defending NIT champions, Western Kentucky, Bradley and Utah, have been picked.

3 Berths to Fill

Three berths to be filled, including two by New York City fives. CCNY, New York U., Manhattan and St. John's are the local fives in the contention. CCNY and NYU clash in Madison Square Garden Tuesday but the entire field may be announced, here tomorrow, anyway.

The outsiders considered for the other positions include, in probable order of preference, San Francisco, North Carolina State, which won its third successive Southern Conference crown by downing George Washington. 55-39, and Bowling Green and Chicago Loyola.

N. C. A. A.:

District two—Probably Villanova with Duquesne, CCNY and Niagara as possibilities.

District three—Kentucky chosen.

District five—Oklahoma A, & M., Missouri Valley champion, looks as favorite. Oklahoma and Nebraska, 9-3 each, tied for Big Seven title with each having game to go. Might be a playoff but Aggies could get nomination without one, too.

District six—A playoff will be held in Dallas next Wednesday and Thursday to decide the nominee. Invited are Baylor, Rice and Arkansas, triple champions of the Southwest Conference with 9-3 records each, and Arizona, Border Conference kings.

District Seven—Wyoming in but its not official yet. Wyoming is 14-5 and Utah 14-6 in big six play. Utah has completed its season and already has accepted a bid to the NIT. Wyoming can win the league title by defeating Utah State in its finale tomorrow.

District Eight—UCLA saved a lot of worry here by downing Southern California for the second straight night, 63-55, to cop the Southern Division flag in the Pacific Coast Conference. Oregon State won in the North and the two Will play off for both the PCC championship and the district berth this week.

D. C. All-Stars Lose Match To Baltimore Bowlers

The Baltimore All-Stars won two of the three matches in their inter-city "grudge" bowling battle with the Washington Stars captained by Al Wright in competition at the Kalorama alleys completed early yesterday morning, with all proceeds going to the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club.

Baltimore won the team match, 1900 to 1889, while in the doubles Wright and Jack Barkley hung up a 785 to defeat Lee Seim and "Fish" Campbell, who tallied 772, with Barkley doing a 170.

In the singles Bob Fisher, last year's number one duckpinner, had to go two extra games before decisioning Bub Guethler, local southpaw star. They were tied at 371 at the end of the first set, and 121 in the first extra game, before Fisher posted a 113 to Guenthler's 106.

Fred Veihmeyer won first prize of $100 in the annual Pop Crawley Memorial Tournament held at the Mount Rainier alleys. Veihmeyer had 668-56—724. Runner-up was Kelly Beach with 670-50—720, while El Geib was third with 685-30—715.

Other winners were: Bill Via, 679-33-712; Jim Quidley, 640-60—700; Horace Atwell, 631-66—697; Hugh Crawley (Pop's Son), 621-73—694; John Dawson, 619-63—682; Don Cutsail, 665-16—681; Fred Murphy, 657-23—680. Moe Meade had high scratch with 644 and Frank Carter high game with 161.

Churches Dedicate Windows, Tablets

Stained glass windows were dedicated at two Washington churches and 30 memorial tablets unveiled at another yesterday as Christians observed the first Sunday in Lent.

A Nation-wide radio audience heard the story of the founding of a Silver Spring, Md., church, and members of a church at Westmoreland Circle, nw. toured their new building for the first time

Dedication of 16 windows at the Church of the Pilgrims, 22d and P sts. nw., by the Rev. Dr. C. Darby Fulton, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, completes construction of a building which was begun in 1929.

Termed the "gift of the Presbyterians of the South to the Nation's Capital," the church was built through funds raised among Southern Presbyterians throughout the country under the guidance of the Rev. Dr. A. R. Bird, pastor since 1911.

The windows, valued at $30,000, tell the story of the life of Christ and the church, and pay tribute to the men and women who built the Church of the Pilgrims. Dr. Bird was assisted in the dedicatory service by clergymen of the Potomac Presbytery of the denomination.

The Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, accepted and hallowed two new windows at the Washington Cathedral in the afternoon. The windows depict the development of life on earth and of man's search for God and God's search for man.

Thirty memorial tablets in the sanctuary and Ball memorial Chapel at Foundry Methodist Church, 16th and P sts. nw., were unveiled at the morning service by the Rev. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, pastor of the church and chaplain of the United States Senate. The memorial tablets were on the altar, McDowell pulpit, Edwin H. Hughes lectern, organ, clergy chairs and stained glass windows.

Members of the church and residents of the community toured the new Westmoreland and Congregational Church at Westmoreland cir. yesterday and Saturday. The church, being built by members of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, now at 1410 Columbia rd. nw., is nearly completed and members hope to be able to use it early in April.

The Rev. Dr. Fred Sherman Buschmeyer, pastor of the church at the time ground was broken, was among the visitors to the new building. Dr. Buschmeyer was succeeded by the Rev. Philip Gordon Scott in December when he left Washington to become associate minister of the General Council of Congregational Christain churches.

The history of the Silver Spring Congregational Christian Church was told on "Living, 1949" a Nation-wide radio broadcast in observance of World Day of Prayer and the beginning of Lent. Entitled "A Blueprint and a Prayer," the program told of the Rev. John McClelland's work in organizing a congregation and building a church in the Maryland community after a survey by the Washington Federation of Churches revealed that 10,000 people in the area were without a church.

Members of the church, who have been worshiping at Montgomery Blair High School, are erecting a church building at Colesville rd. and Indian Spring dr., Silver Spring.

Snapshot Swap Unites Greek Girl, Restaurateur Here

A 2-by-2-inch snapshot examined skeptically last September led to romance which resulted in a marriage ceremony last night in the Greek Orthodox Church of St. Sophia.

"Very interesting, very interesting," mused Angelo Valltos when he first saw the picture, but he was all for being cautious. 'After all, you can't always tell from a picture," he said.

Over in Sparta, Greece, Valltos' likeness was getting the same cautious once-over. "From your picture and letter—so far so good," wrote Voula Matsupetrou, the party of the first part, in Greek.

And so it went. About a half-dozen letters later, 37-year-old Valltos, manager of his father's Seven Seas Grill at 5915 Georgia ave nw., had popped the question, translated into Greek by his younger sister, Fannie.

Anxious days went by until the postman delivered Voula's affirmative reply. Valltos, a former GI, obtained a passport and Voula flew in here on December 31, just under the deadline for bringing in GI fiancees.

Caution faded quickly after they saw each other. On February 6, best man George Anton, a friend of the family, fitted them both out with engagement rings at a formal party according to Greek custom.

And last night, the Rev. Amilianos Laloussis married them at St. Sophia's.

For a year before the situation got to the snapshot stage, Matsukas filled the ears of mother Valltos with stories of his pretty young neice in Sparta. Mother Valltos became enthused, asked for a picture. Angelo took it from there—with the help of Sister Fannie, who, it turned out, can write a pretty convincing Greek.

The family moved here from Greece when Angelo was 3 years old. After some schooling at the Blake and Petworth schools, Angelo went into the restaurant business and remained in it except for three years Army service which included five major European battles in World War II.

Yesterday, the 25-year-old Voula seemed satisfied with the way cupid had carried the mail. The English language isn't giving her much trouble and the American way of life suits her fine.

Along Our Street

with Aunt Penny

A number of boys and girls in the neighborhood have started a drive for old toys. They plan to collect and repair the toys, then send them to needy children overseas.

I think the spirit of sharing is a wonderful thing among youngsters—and grown-ups, too. It's this same spirit that prompts neighbors to share rides, or lawn mowers, or telephone party lines.

Party lines are a good example of how sharing can pay dividends. When we use our party lines with courtesy and consideration for "the other fellow," we can be pretty sure he'll do the same for us. By not interrupting when the line is being used, except in an emergency . . . by allowing a little time between calls so that others have a chance to use the line, we're really helping ourselves as well as our neighbors to better telephone service.

$1500-$4000 Cuts Made in Proposed Executive Pay Scale

Cuts from $1500 to $4000 in the Administration's proposed executive salary scale have been made by the O'Conor subcommittee of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

The subcommittee approved without change the provision to give $330 retroactive pay raises to the District's 7500 classified employes and Foreign Service's 6000 employes.

The subcommittee bill will be reported formally to the full Civil Service Committee Tuesday. Its approval is anticipated.

Only last Thursday the President called the subcommittee members to the White House to make a special appeal to them for prompt action on the executive pay bill. The President urged the bill's approval without changes. His bill would create four executive salary brackets, $17,500; $20,000; $22,500, and $25,000.

Instead, the subcommittee recommended $16,000, $18,000, $20,000 and $25,000. Cabinet members would get $25,000, undersecretaries, $20,000; agency heads, $18,000, and $16,000 salaries would go to assistant secretaries, members of boards, commissions, etc. Federal Reserve Board members would get $16,000 each in the subcommittee bill, a $4000 cut from the Truman bill.

Subcommittee members explained that Federal Deposit Insurance officials insisted they be paid the same as Federal Reserve officials. But instead of raising FDIC, Federal Reserve was cut back.

The subcommittee also recommended $16,000 salaries for 15 additional officials. Among them were the Internal Revenue commissioner, Public Roads commissioner, three assistants to the Defense Secretary, the general managers of both the Atomic Energy Commission and the Tennessee Valley Authority, the FBI director, the Commodity Credit president, the governor of Farm Credit and the administrator of Rural Electrification.

In addition, the subcommittee will urge that the President be given the blanket authority to raise the salaries of 10 more Federal officials to a maximum of $16,00.

Members said there was no controversy whatever in the subcommittee over the District and Foreign Service pay raises.

INTERIOR: The future of two of its top officials may be decided today. It's touch and go on what both decisions will be.

The Senate Public Lands Committee will take up the 18-month-old nomination of JAMES BOYD to be director of the Bureau of Mines. Boyd hasn't been paid for more that a year although he has been on the job. Opposing his comfirmation are John L. Lewis, the labor leader, and Senator Millikin (R., Colo.).

The Senate Appropriations Committee is slated to make up the House-approved rider which would permit Reclamation Commissioner MIKE STRAUS to be paid a salary. Chairman McKellar (D., Tenn.) is reported to hold the balance of power.

LABOR: Running hard to be Assistant Labor Secretary is ELLA ROLLER, who works in the women's division of the Democratic National Committee. Miss Roller is a former employe of the OPA and other Federal agencies. She has wide political support for the job but she's being opposed by several women's groups that have close tie-ins with labor organizations.

POSTOFFICE: A series of sharp attacks on the operation of this department—the world's largest business—is brewing. Postal rates hearings will start today before the House Civil Service Committee.

JOB NEWS: Civil Service soon will announce an exam to fill 600 teacher and teacher-adviser jobs in schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Salaries range from $2498 to $3351, plus 25 per cent for Alaska assignments . . . Also on deck is a test for radio engineers to fill vacancies in the Federal Communications Commission. Starting salaries—$2974 to $3727 . . . Applications will be accepted until March 17 for the zone deputy collector and office auditor exam to fill Internal Revenue jobs here and in nearby States. The jobs pay $2974 to start . . . An exam for engineer jobs that pay from $3727 to $10,305 will be given by the Naval Ordnance Test and Auxiliary Air Stations, Chincoteague, Va.

The Naval Academy at Annapolis has an exam open for metallurgist positions which pay $3727 to $6235 to start . . . Bolling Air Force Base here has tests open for chauffeur, $2152; ambulance driver, $2350, and motor vehicle dispatcher, $3024 . . . At Fort Belvoir, Va., these new exams are open: assistant fire chief, $3978; firefighter inspector, $3025; guard, $2574, and fire test fighter, $1.04 to $1.37 an hour . . . At the Patuxent River, Md., Naval Air Station is another test open for firemen, $9.44 to $10.40 a day . . . The Army Chemican Center, Md., has an exam open for all grades of engineers . . . Go to the Civil Service Commission for more details on these and other tests.

FIRINGS: Accountants and auditors in Grades 13, 14, and 15 and who are in competitive jobs with temporary and war service status must be fired by April 15. The Civil Service order doesn't apply to nonstatus people who were rated eligible in a recent test . . . TURNOVER: It sank to its lowest level since the end of the war. Only 23 were hired and separated for every 1000 employes during that month . . . FEDERAL CAREER Employes Association will meet at 6 p. m. Wednesday in the Interior Auditorium. Classified employes are invited. Speakers will be Senator Langer (R., N. Dak.) and Representative Klein (D., N. Y.). Plans for a legislative and expansion program also will be discussed.

EXAMS: Civil Service is accepting applications for male laborers ($2020 to $2150 a year) and foreman of laborers ($2350 to $2799 a year). Veterans get most of the foreman jobs. However, applications will be accepted from nonveterans . . . An exam for P-1 engineer ($2974) to fill openings at Wright Field, Ohio, is now open. Mechanical, electrical and aeronautical engineering jobs are open . . . An exam for museum art specialists ($2974 to $8509) to fill openings in the National Gallery of Art will be announced by Civil Service . . . More than 1600 applied for this year's geologist test, double last year's applications.

Transit Head Hints Fares Not Adequate

Merrill Claims Operating Net Shows Decline In 1948 Report

Despite two fare increases in two years, Capital Transit Co. gently hinted last night that it is not certain that present rates are "adequate."

E. D. Merrill

President E. D. Merrill, in the 1948 pamphlet report to be mailed today to company stockholders, pointed out that the transit system earned only "slightly more than 2 per cent on a rate base of about 30 million dollars."

"While gross operating revenues and net income under the new transit fares show material improvement, the adequacy of the rates is yet undetermined," he added.

Operating income from transit operations (excluding the Glen Echo Amusement Park) totaled $672,685 for 1948. Net income for the year was $390,665 or $1.63 a common share. This included earnings at the new rate of fare for only the last two months of 1948.

In 1947, the company reported a net loss of $90,631 and omitted dividends for nine months. Dividends of 50 cents a share were resumed in the last quarter of 1947 and for the first quarter this year.

The Public Utilities Commission granted financial relief to the company in the form of fare boosts in May 1947, and again on October 31, 1948. This brought price of a weekly pass from $1.25 to the present $1.75 and tokens from three for 25 cents to the present three for 35 cents. Cash fares went from 10 to 13 cents.

At hearings before the PUC prior to the last rate increase, it is recalled that Capital Transit officials fought vigorously for a straight 15-cent cash fare; two tokens for 25 cents and $1.85 for a weekly pass.

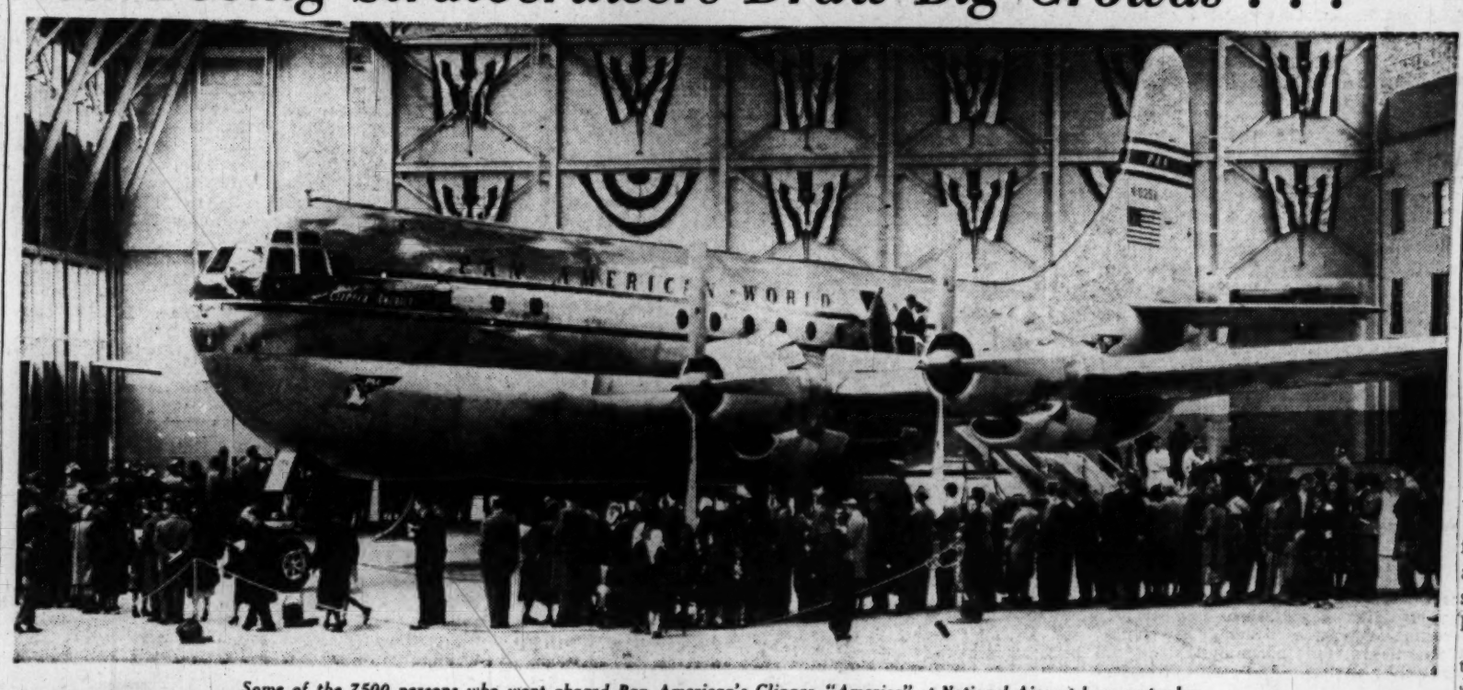
Merrill expressed concern over a steady decline in revenue passengers during the past few years. He blamed this on "increased availability of private automobiles" but conceded that "increased fares probably reduced the number of short rides temporarily."

Total revenue paassengers carried in 1948 was reported as 342,982,247. This compares with 380,711,307 in 1948, a decline of 9.9 per cent.

Merrill also noted that operating expenses per mile operated by buses was up from 20.45 cents in 1940 to 44.27 cents in 1948; streetcars up from 32.31 cents per mile in 1940 to 56.80 cents in 1948.

The report also stated that about 59 cents of each dollar of revenue was spent for payroll costs in 1948. Adjustment to tracks and other facilities at Dupont Circle will cost the company $550,000, Merrill estimated.

New Boeing Stratocruisers Draw Big Crowds . . .



Some of the 7500 persons who went aboard Pan American's Clipper "America" at National Airport here yesterday

The Washington Post

More than 500 persons with an "urge to soar like birds" had their urge satisfied yesterday while nearly 7500 of their less fortunate companions were happy to settle for a close look at one of the world's plushiest commercial planes.

At the Washington National Airport crowds of people, children and dogs, stared, took airplane rides and photographs and generally enjoyed themselves in the exhilarating atmosphere of a stiff breeze, the roar of engines and the smell of exhaust fumes and hydraulic oil.

For Miss Gretchen Wilmoth of 3000 Connecticut ave. nw., the flight was "wonderful," and as far as she was concerned, she said, could have been making its regular flight between San Francisco and Honolulu.

While Pan American was giving free flights on its new Boeing stratocruiser, some 150 paying customers also were getting a bird's eye view of the city on the airport's regular sightseeing trips.

For the bulk of the airport's visitors the day's highlight was a close inspection tour of the Pan American clipper ship America, christened Saturday by Miss Margaret Truman.

Ten tanned and streamlined hostesses were on hand to explain the intricacies of the streamlined million and a half dollars worth of upholstered steel and chromium that can leave San Francisco at midnight and be in Honolulu in plenty of time for breakfast.

Some waited as long as three hours in lines several blocks long to examine the luxurious double-decked airliner with its spacious bar, nylon seat covers and roomy berths.

Most of the interest centered around the compact kitchen equipped to serve 150 meals in the air without refueling the coffee pot, while others were impressed with the maroon and gray cabin that can skim along at 30,000 feet and 340 miles an hour.

At closing time yesterday more than 1200 persons were still in line waiting to see the plane. PAA officials said the plane would again be exhibited this morning. Both planes, however, will leave the airport this evening to begin regular flying passenger schedules.

James Grover Pearson, one of three children of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Pearson, 3601 O st. nw., was struck by a car whose operator was identified by police as Mrs. Elizabeth S. Moody, 65, of 3416 Porter st. nw.

The boy was pronounced dead on the scene and his body was taken to the District morgue. Mrs. Moody was charged with driving with an expired District driver's permit; and was released in the custody of her attorney pending a coroner's hearing.

James' father is a 37-year-old hard floor finisher for the Kennedy Floor & Tile Co., 709 Kennedy st. nw. Mrs. Pearson was placed under doctor's care after the accident. The Pearsons' other children are Ray, 13; Patricia, 11, and Carrie, 2.

Two pedestrians were injured at 1 p. m. yesterday when they were struck by a car at 3d and Varnum sts. nw. In Emergency Hospital with possible concussion was Lillian Johnson, 14, of 4451 MacArthur blvd. nw. Miss Olive Kirby, 60, of 4118 New Hampshire ave. nw., was treated for head injuries.

Police charged the car driver, Anthony J. Stelz, 41, of 4915 N. Capitol st., with failure to yield right of way to a pedestrian. Police said the woman and girl were crossing Varnum st. when the accident occured.

Injuries in Crash Are Fatal to Marine

Marine Corps Pfc. David Lee LaPrarie, 20, died at 11:15 p. m. Saturday, nine hours after the car in which he was a passenger, struck another auto near Triangle, Va., and overturned. LaPrarie died at the Naval Hospital in Quantico of a fractured skull. A colleague, Corpl. Marty Campbell, 20, was still in critical condition at the hospital yesterday.

Two other car occupants, Pfc. Gordon V. Pierce, 21, the driver, and William V. Southard, 19, were listed in good condition at the hospital. All four Marines were stationed at Yorktown, Va. The accident occurred on U. S. Route 1 at the traffic light in Triangle. State police said the Marines' car, traveling about 70 miles per hour, went through a stop light and struck another auto, rolling more than 300 feet before it stopped.

Medical Plan For Indigents To Be Revised

District government medical officals are planning a complete overhaul of the District Physicans' Program under which indigents are given medical care at home by private doctors paid by the District.

At present, nine physicians are employed by the Health Department in various parts of the city to be on call for (1) treatment of indigents physically unable to visit hospital clinics, (2) for care of indigents released from hospitals, (3) for distribution of shots in case of an epidemic or for emergency treatment when ambulance service is not available.

Each of the nine is assigned a particular section of the city and is expected to make calls as directed by the Health Department. For this each receives $3.33 a day, regardless of how many visits are made.

Under the proposed plan, the number of doctors will be cut to five and will be removed from the District payroll. Instead, they will execute contracts with the city under which they will undertake to make required visits for a fee of $2400 a year.

Dr. Lawrence J. Thomas, superintendent of the program, said the increased compensation will encourage the participating physicians to render better service than in the past. The doctors will be required to check periodically with the police precincts in their areas and with the Health Department to obtain information on calls required.

From a fiscal standpoint, the plan is expected to enable the District to save funds by eliminating responsibility for providing retirement pay, additional compensation for overtime, annual leave and sick leave.

In 1947, the doctors made an average of 1.67 calls a day and in 1946, the average was less than 1, indicating the relatively small need for maintaining the present larger group of standby physicians.

The proposal is now before the Federal Bureau of Internal Revenue for a decision on whether the District may stop deducting withholding and other taxes from checks paid under the new plan.

Special D. C. Board Named To Hear Egress Law Appeals

District Commissioners have appointed a five-man Board of Special Appeal to hear appeals from the Egress Act regulations, it was learned last night.

The group will hold weekly hearings in the District Building to hear appeals from persons receiving notices of deficiencies in egress exits, alterations and fire protection devices in their buildings and also will recommend modifications of the regulations.

The board is directed to recommend changes where the rules "cause undue practical difficulties or are impossible to carry out because of structural conditions; if the modifications provide adequate safety from a structural, ventilation and fire prevention and protection standpoint, or if the purpose and intent of the regulations are fulfilled."

A fee of $20 must be paid at the time of filing an appeal. The board will publish quarterly bulletins covering the appeals, action by the board and votes of each member.

The board is headed by Warren H. Stewart of the Department of Inspections, who was named to an indefinite term. Other members are R. A. Warfield of the Fire Marshal's office, vice chairman of the board, indefinite term; Howard F. Humphries, Washington Real Estate Board, appointed to June 19, 1950; Nelson Jeffries, Washington Building Congress, June 19, 1951, and Phillip E. Schreier, American Institute of Architects, Washington Chapter, June 19, 1949.

Alternates are Edmund W. Riley, Inspection Department, indefinite term; Charles Laschalt, Fire Marshal's office, indefinite term; Harvey L. Humphrey, Washington Real Estate Board, December 30, 1949; B. T. Rome, Master Builders Association, December 30, 1950, and Daniel C. Walser, American Society of Civil Engineers, Washington Chapter, December 30, 1951.

Reports Being Studied To Determine Action

District officials are studying reports prepared by egress survey teams on 190 District-owned buildings and 202 District school buildings to determine which of three actions should be taken, Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, Engineer Commissioner, revealed yesterday.

The alternatives are: (1) to recommend what changes be made to overcome the deficiencies; (2), to appeal to the Board of Special Appeal for exceptions from the rules where this is deemed wise; and (3), to recommend changes in the regulations if alterations are considered impractical.

Director of Construction Archie G. Hutson and his aides are studying the individual reports, starting with the schools, to determine which course of action to pursue, General Young said.

Republicans Ask Place in Running D. C.

The Republican State Committee for the District gave notice last night that it will not stand by and see the Board of District Commissioners be loaded with Democrats.

The District GOP announced that a letter already has been sent to President Truman urging bipartisan representation on the board and reminding the President that such representation has been honored since the commissioner form of government was set up in 1878.

James C. Wilkes, chairman of the District Republicans, said the letter contained a resolution urging bipartisanship which the executive committee of the District GOP adopted recently by unanimous vote.

The Republican request followed indorsement by District Democrats of Thomas P. Morgan, jr., retired insurance executive and a Democrat, as Commissioner to succeed John Russell Young.

Young, a Republican, was appointed by President Roosevelt. His third term expires in May.

The second Commissioner, Guy Mason, is a Democrat. The third, Engineer Commissioner, currently Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, is, by law an appointee of the Secretary of the Army, subject to Presidential approval.

The resolution of the District Republicans stated that the two great political parties have had an understanding since 1878 that the two civilian Commissioners should be appointed from each party.

"That understanding," the resolution stated, has been almost uniformly honored by the successive Presidents of the United States."

"We respectfully urge that in any appointments now or hereafter to be made, the two major parties be represented by the selection of one civilian Commissioner from each of them," the resolution added.

Wilkes, who signed the letter to Mr. Truman, pointed out, however, that no particular Republican is seeking the position to his knowledge, nor has any one been advanced in Republican circles for the job.

House Burns

Woman, 75, Is Rescued By Firemen

A 75-year-old, semi-invalid woman, was rescued by firemen last night from a blaze which badly damaged a large, two-story frame building at 7135 Chestnut st. nw.

Miss Agnes Russell was carried down a ladder from her second story bedroom by Pvt. W. E. Johnston of No. 11 Truck Company after she had hung out of a window gasping for air while thick fumes and flames raged through the burning frame house.

Three other women in the house fled to safety, one of them Mrs. Russell Roller, owner, who is widely known as an artist specializing in wax modeling and paintings of flowers and fruits.

Breaks Out in Studio

Miss Jane Roller, niece of Miss Russell, said the fire started a little before 10 p. m. in her mother's downstairs studio and quickly spread to the bathroom, dining room, and kitchen.

Miss Roller said she was listening to a radio in an attic room at the time and her mother, Mrs. Russell Roller, and another aunt, Miss Mary Roller, were listening to the radio in a downstairs front room.

All four women were treated for smoke inhalation on the scene by Fire Department Rescue Squad No. 2. On the advice of Dr. G. B Queen, 112 Willow ave., Takoma Park, Md., Miss Russell was removed to Suburban Hospital.

Treated for Smoke

Treated for smoke were Pvt. George Larrick of No. 2 Rescue Squad; Hollis Todd, a neighbor who took part in rescue operations, and Pvt. S. Reid, No. 22 engine company.

Miss Roller said she believed the fire was caused by defective wiring in the studio, an addition built onto the house in 1937. She said at least four rooms were burned and several others badly damaged by water.

The fire was brought under control within 20 minutes after 16 pieces of equipment responded to a local and a box alarm.

Stork Wins Race As Baby Is Born In Speeding Car

An impatient stork delivered his 9-pound, 6-ounce burden early yesterday to Mrs. Elsie Tierney, 21, in the back of her brother-in-law's car just as the vehicle pulled up in front of Sibley Hospital after an 8-mile dash through town.

Paul Tierney, 27, the driver of the car, said he hit as high as 70 miles an hour, hoping, for once, that some police would appear and clear the road for him. No police showed up but the stork kept pace.

Also along, was the proud but helpless papa, Milton Tierney, 25, a plumber, who had accompanied his wife from their home in the 5300 block of Shadyside ave., se., to his brother's home in the 5100 block of Alton st., se., for a ride to the hospital.

Employes who followed the thief as he dashed out of the store and disappeared on E st. said he was joined by six others, all about 19 years old. Police described the thief as about 19, 6 feet tall, 150 pounds, dark-skinned Negro, wearing a green corduroy slouch hat and brown checkered coat.

Miss Benefiel said she was sleeping on a couch in the living room of the first floor apartment and did not hear the thief come in through the window. Firemen Ask More Equipment

Arlington County needs at least two more fire companies and replacements for its "obsolete fire equipment," John Paul Jones, president of the County Firemen's Association said yesterday.

He said he and other association members would ask the Arlington County Board for new equipment when it holds a public hearing on the 1949-50 county budget March 24.

One new fire company is needed in the Country Club Hills section, Jones said, and the other on Columbia Pike west of Glebe rd. Both areas are too far from present companies, according to Jones.

When he first came to Arlington in 1933, Jones said, the county had eight fire companies and a population of about 28,000. Today, with a population of about 130,000, there are still only eight companies.

Jones pointed out that there are "outdated" 1930 pumper engines at the Jefferson District, Clarendon, Arlington, Ballston, and Cherrydale fire companies.

"If fire breaks out in a four or five-story apartment building and the equipment breaks down—as it frequently does—we're in a spot," Jones said.

Jones noted that Arlington residents last fall had voted a $4,750,000 bond issue to build new schools, but asked "what happens when they build a new school and it burns down for lack of adequate fire equipment?"

The 1949-50 county budget will be made public at 8 p. m. today when it is presented to the County Board.

Homer J. Mellett

Tomorrow's Scientists See Wonder . . .

Truman Message Heads List Of Tributes to Sen. Broughton

President Harry S. Truman yesterday sent a message of condolence to the widow of Senator J. Melville Broughton, who died of heart attack here early yesterday.

Informed by newsmen of the unexpected death of Senator J. Melville Broughton (D., N. C.), the President said: "That's terrible news."

President Truman's was one of a number of messages of sympathy which came yesterday from statesmen and Government officials who had been shocked to learn of Senator Broughton's sudden death.

North Carolina's Senior Senator Clyde Hoey said:

"The death of Senator Broughton is a great shock to the whole State and a distinct personal loss to me. He was a man of great ability, high personal charm and strict integrity. He had a world of friends. North Carolina will miss him and the Senate will mourn his passing.

Representative Kerr (D., N. C.) said:

The First Baptist Church here in Washington mourned his death today as will all of North Carolina and many elsewhere in the Nation. Senator Broughton enlisted as teacher of the men's Bible class here as soon as he came to Washington. . . He was a strong and vigorous man physically, mentally and spiritually."

Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, a former North Carolinian, said:

"No new Senator has made a greater impression both in Congress and in Government . . . His death is indeed a tragedy: I am deeply grieved over the untimely passing of my close friend."

Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall, of Goldsboro, N. C., said:

"North Carolina has lost a distinguished Statesman and a truly representative citizen whose broad vision and liberal approach to public questions will be greatly missed. Mrs. Royall and I deeply sympathize with Mrs. Broughton and the family."

Born in Raleigh, N. C., November 17, 1888, Senator Broughton had been Governor of North Carolina before being elected to the Senate after a bitter primary fight with former Senator William B. Umstead.

A Wake County farmer for 30 years, he devoted much of his efforts to the improvement in farm methods, crop diversification and new marketing facilities in the Tar Heel State.

Also during his administration, a retirement program for teachers and State employes, a nine-month, 12-grade school law and a broad medical care and hospital-building program were launched.

Broughton graduated from Wake Forest College in 1910, after having starred as a football player. After a two-year stint as a schoolteacher, he worked for a short time as a reporter on the Winston-Salem (N. C.) Journal. In 1912 he went to Harvard Law School and two years later was admitted to the North Carolina bar.

As Governor, he was active in the civic affairs of his city. He taught a Sunday school class in the Baptist church there. He was a Mason, a former president of the Raleigh Chamber of Commerce and of the North Carolina Bar Association.

Although he was acting superintendent of public instruction in Wake County, N. C., for a short time before World War I, he spent most of his active life as an attorney, practicing in Raleigh.

In 1927, he was elected to the State Senate, where he served for one term. In the Democratic National Convention of 1936, Broughton was temporary chairman and keynote speaker.

In addition to his wife, Senator Broughton is survived by four children, J. Melville, jr., who graduates from the University of North Carolina law school this spring; Robert Bain, also a student at North Carolina; Miss Alice Willson Broughton, a student at Bowman Gray Medical School, Winston Salem, N. C., and Woodson Broughton, who is in the Army, stationed at Fort Jackson, S. C.

J. Melville Broughton and Robert Broughton were to fly to Washington last night to accompany their father's body by train to Raleigh, N. C., at midnight.

Funeral services will be held in Raleigh on Tuesday at 3 p. m., with burial in Montlawn Memorial Park. The services will be conducted at the Tabernacle Baptist Church by Dr. F. O. Mixon, pastor, assited by Dr. Edward H. Pruden, pastor of the First Baptist Church here. Senator Broughton attended Dr. Pruden's church and taught a Sunday school class of 75 members.

Yale Club to Hold 75th Annual Dinner

The seventy-fifth annual dinner of the Yale Club of Washington will be held Wednesday at 7 p. m. in the Sapphire Room of the Mayflower Hotel.

Scholars See Cyclotron Demonstrated

Forty young scientists of tomorrow saw a 60-inch cyclotron yesterday afternoon and with teen-age maturity said it was "interesting."

Finalists in the eighth annual talent search conducted by Science Clubs of America for the Westinghouse Science scholarships, they saw the cyclotron of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism, Carnegie Institution of Washington, at 5241 Broad Branch rd. nw.

The group, which includes Walter Gilbert, 16, of 3309 35th st. nw., and Carl Weber Werntz, 17, of 620 Nicholson st. nw., saw Dr. Dean Cowie, physicist-in-charge, demonstrate the magnetic pull of the atom-smasher—which stopped the wristwatch of Roger Nelson, 17, of Spring City, Utah, who forgot to leave it outside.

A match book that stood up on the end of a finger because of the magnetic pull on a staple, the keys on a ring that stood out horizontally because of the pull, and finally the effect on a wrench, which when released smashed into the side of the cyclotron with a bang, were features of the demonstration.

Afterwards, the principles of the cyclotron and its value as a "tremendous tool for research" in medicine, biochemistry and other fields, were explained and the future of nuclear physics described.

The five-day program will end with a 7 p. m. dinner in the Hotel Statler today for the nine girls and 31 boys.

Home Rule Studied For Silver Spring

Merger Bill Decision Seen Near

By Roger B. Farquhar
Post Reporter

A quiet, unassuming political scientist whose office window overlooks the sprawling University of Maryland campus may soon become the center of a stormy controversy in Silver Spring, Md.

Dr. Ray

He is Dr. Joseph M. Ray, head of the university's department of government and politics and director of the bureau of public administration at College Park.

Unknown to most Silver Spring residents now, his name may become a byword there when he completes a pending five-month survey to determine the governmental needs of the bustling community.

At present, Silver Spring is a political nonentity. Government functions there are carried on in Rockville State agencies and the State agencies in the nearby area—the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission.

Basic Survey Question

Whether Silver Spring residents should figuratively thumb their collective nos. at many of these county and State agencies and direct their own affairs will be the basic question in the survey, Dr. Ray said yesterday.

Dr. Ray's recommendations on the controversial question, are certain to meet with a warm reception in some quarters and with something less than enthusiasm in others.

His role can be compared to that of a physician called in to make an examination and who, after studying the case, leaves the patient with a prescription.

"Whether the patient accepts the treatment is up to him," Dr. Ray declared. "After I make my recommendations I fold up my tent and quietly steal away."

Dr. Ray is the veteran of six similar surveys throughout the State. His department, in the past three years, has surveyed Hagerstown, Cumberland, Takoma Park, Dundalk, Pocomoke City and Wicomico.

Aim to Stir Interest

"What we tried to do is make political science mean something to the people of the State who are active in politics and government," he said of his department.

The survey of Dundalk, a residential community in Baltimore County similar in size and character to Silver Spring, will closely resemble the pending survey, Dr. Ray points out.

In that one, he says, it was recommended that the community should not incorporate.

But Silver Spring residents eager to learn what the government researcher's answer to the incorporation question in their community may be, should not lean too heavily on the Dundalk result.

Asked what the trend is on communities of more than 50,000 persons incorporating, the official replied unhesitatingly that a majority of them are forming their own governments.

Question Widely Discussed

If Silver Spring should incorporate, it would have a mayor and council—and authority, if it wished, to assume many functions of local government.

The incorporation question, already widely discussed, is opposed by some community leaders who contend the move would lead to higher taxes. Supporters say incorporation means "we would no longer be treated as a stepchild."

Opposed by About 500

Put forth by a group of citizens from the three communities, the measure already has encountered opposition in Riverdale Heights, where protest petitions have been signed by approximately 500 residents. The peitions were circulated by the Riverdale Heights Citizens Association, although the body has not taken a formal vote on the proposal.

The group's opposition, according to Mrs. Samuel Bohrer, president of the civic body, is based on the belief that cost of maintaining urban-type streets and other facilities in the area would be prohibitive. As a consolidated city, she pointed out, the three communities would have to pay maintenance costs now borne by Prince Georges County.

Could Pool Resources

Her view was not shared by Chris Sondberg, Riverdale Heights contractor, who was one of the sponsors of the proposal. Sondberg said as a city, the three communities could pool their resources, collect their own taxes and receive full benefit of local taxation, now shared by other Prince Georges communities.

By "keping taxes right at home" and by qualifying for certain State grants that are available only to incorporated areas, the proposed city probably would be able to adopt a tax rate lower, than the existing county levy, Sondberg contended.

In the event the delegation favors the referendum proposal and it is approved by the tate Legislature, the city plan could be effected only if all three communities approve it in separate referanda, Wilkinsin pointed out. The three areas have a combined population of about 5000.

Sharp Upturn Due in D. C. Tax Returns

Tax Assessor Edward A. Dent reminded yesterday that all persons residing or domiciled in the District are required to file District income tax returns by April 15, a month after the Federal deadline.

At present, advice on filling out these forms is available in Room 9, District Building, 14th and D sts. nw., and later as residents rush to execute their local forms after completing the Federal ones, tables in the corridor of the first floor will be staffed by advisers.

At present, the income tax carries an exemption of $1000, but even persons earning less than this amount are required to file a return, Dent warned. Half of the income tax payment is due by April 15 and the other half by October 15. About $4,200,000 is expected from this revenue source, Dent said.

The franchise tax, placed on the income of incorporated and unincorporated firms, is also due on April 15. Half of the tax is due then and the other by October 15. About $5,600,000 was collected from this tax last year.

It's Nice in Winterhaven, Goodwins, Back, Report

By Marie McNair

JUST BACK from a Florida holiday are Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin who visited Mrs. Jess Hawley of Chicago at her Winterhaven estate.

Life at the Hawley menage, Mrs. Goodwin reports, is a laissez-faire proposition, with house guests coming and going as they please. A series of guest cottages set out on terraced emerald lawns provides three two-room apartments or plesant accommodations for more than 20 people.

In each apartment there's an icebox, kept well stocked with fresh fruits and other light refreshments, and the makings for cocktails. A card is slipped under your door if there's a formal dinner party planned for that evening, otherwise the meal in the main house is served from a buffet.

A short motor drive away is Dinterset Lake, where Mr. and Mrs. Colket Wilson—she's the former Martha McKenna of Washington,—have a charming house and miles of orange groves. They also raise Brahmin cattle, and a single cow grazing by the roadside was the first to greet Mrs. Goodwin as her car turned into the long driveway.

And now—the first thing on the agenda for the sponsor of the Spanish Classes, is to arrange for the cocktail party which Senora de la Colina wife of the Mexican Ambassador will give on March 19 for members of all the Spanish classes. Mrs Dwight Eisenhower will be the honor guest and this time wives will be permitted to bring their husbands.

THOSE irrepressible Baker twins—Betty and Virginia—are teaming up again.

The daughters of Admiral and Mrs. Harold D. Baker, debutantes in Washington a season or two ago, have been cover girls; posed for national ads, and were pictured over five pages in a typical Baker duo "day."

Now its television, and Washington friends who tune in next Sunday at 7:30 p. m., will see Virginia and Betty in "The Hartmans," one of the new television shows.

The cameras will follow Virginia, whose engagement to Major Michael Rogers was announced last month, as she selects gowns from Textron's Trousseau. And modeling the frocks for Virginia, will be Betty, who's identical in size, looks and coloring.

The Baker twins appearance next Sunday opens up a series of engaged debutantes on the Textron program. Each week a deb from one of the eastern cities will be picked to do her television trousseau shopping. Washington's No. 2 debutante will appear a few weeks from now.

TOWN TOPICS:

Mrs. Robert Jackson, wife of the Justice, is home again after a trip to Mexico. She flew down with Jacqueline Cochran, who's a top pilot, and before she returned was a guest of Miss Cochran on her ranch.

Weekend guests of Pendleton Hogan in his Georgetown home are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Wilson, who are on their way from Boston to visit Chapel Hill, N. C., their former home. Mr. Wilson, now head of the Harvard Press, was once head of the University of North Carolina Press. He and Mrs. Wilson lived in Georgetown when Mr. Wilson was a lieutenant commander during the war.

Miss Minerva Bernardino, Dominican dynamo, who is soon to be off on another European trip which will take her also to the Middle East, has just been presented with the Dominican Government's highest award.

Young Man, Trying to Pay Off His Father's Dishonorable Debt, Proposes Affair to Girl After Her Parents Forbade Her to Marry Him

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Five years ago I met Bob, a very wonderful man, I thought. I admit that, at first, I was carried away by young enthusiastic puppy love; but as time went on and we continued dating, I found that our relationship was growing into something much greater.

I fell completely and wholly in love. I know that sounds trite, but it is the only way I can explain our attachment. We became engaged and planned to be married in June of last year. But in April Bob's father was killed in an accident, and it developed that the father had embezzled money from his employers.

Bob quit school to get a job and start paying off his father's debt. When my family heard the story, they threw up their hands in disgust and forbade me to marry Bob. When I pleaded with them, my father gave me an absolute "No," and said if we married I wouldn't be permitted to set foot in my home again. Also he vowed to blackball Bob in his work.

Has Man Stopped Loving the Girl?

BOB STILL wanted to marry me, but I knew if we married that he wouldn't even have his job any longer, with which to support us. Yet we are so much in love that we feel we cannot wait much longer. And about a week ago Bob suggested an affair. I have always thought that a man who loves a woman doesn't propose that.

Has Bob stopped loving me? That's the big problem worrying me now. I haven't stopped loving him; but I am confused. Should I defy my parents and marry him? Or should I stop seeing him, believing that he no longer loves me? Your kind advice will be much appreciated. E. G.

Parents' Stand Seems Justified

DEAR E. G.: The definition of embezzlement is "to make away with; to steal; to appropriate fraudulently to one's own use, as property entrusted to one's care." You say Bob's father was guilty of this, a crime uncovered after his death.

Also you say that your family, on learning the shameful fact, immediately acted harshly on the theory "Like father, like son," and washed their hands of Bob—demanding that you do the same.

In that unhappy time, your unswerving devotion to Bob was commendable. You showed a fine generous spirit, a gallant loyalty, in refusing to "hang" Bob figuratively for his father's misdeed; and because you were standing against your family in giving Bob a vote of confidence, he was vested with special responsibility to justify your courageous attitude.

Man's Suggestion Exposes Weakness

BUT ALAS, his ignoble suggestion of an affair, presumably to assuage discouraged emotions now that the road to marriage seems blocked, tends to prove that your family's grim supposition is correct: that Bob is a chip off the old block, essentially untrustworthy, too; that he hasn't the fortitude to ignore temptation to "steal" when circumstances indicate theft might be possible.

Since you love Bob completely and want only to marry him, and have been faithfully waiting a time when he might be financially able to support a wife, Bob's suggestion of an affair is a shocking violation of trust. It is a move on his part in the direction of moral embezzlement, that would "make away with" your honor, self-respect, psychological and social security; and would furtively appropriate to himself the use of your body, lawlessly.

Bob cares for you after his fashion, but he is weak, as his father was; and his love reflects the poor quality of his character and means that he would be a bad risk as husband and family head. And don't you want your children to have a fine father? In self-defense you ought to stop seeing Bob, because his suggestion of an affair means he has given his soul's consent to it; and the influence of his intention would gradually undermine your resistance, if you tolerate exposure to it. M. H.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Stop! Stop! Stop!

You've probably heard the old story about the harassed mother who said to Willie's older sister, "Go see what Willie is doing and tell him to stop." And there was a cartoon recently in which Mother says to Dad, as little Mary is playing in the background, "She told the teacher her name was Mary Stop."

It's pretty easy, indeed, for almost any parent of young children to get into the "stop" habit. There are so many things that children do which have to be corrected, so many ways in which they may hurt themselves, so many things they may break!

And yet this "stop" habit isn't a good one. It brings an unpleasant feeling both to him who uses it and to him on whom it is used. Often, too, after a time, children develop an immunity to such nagging.

Though it may seem less natural at first, the habit of suggesting something else to take the place of that which the child usually would be asked to stop is better. Thus, when Johnny starts to scrawl on the wall, large sheets of paper can be furnished. Or when Susy is being a little too noisy, she can be asked to help with something she particularly likes to do.

It's better for the grown-up to stop himself and think of some interesting substitute activity for the child than constantly to be shouting "stop."

About Treating Blonde Wood

What do you recommend in caring for a blond prima vera wood dining table? It is new and I have hesitated to use an ordinary paste wax, which seems sturdier than furniture polish, for fear it will yellow the finish.
V. O. B.

Will you tell me if there is an ivory craftsman or some place where I might have a piece of ivory carving repaired?
M. W.

Firms listed under "Art Dealers" in the yellow section of the telephone book and advertising that they do repair work can mend the ivory carving for you.

To L. B. C.: Regarding the cake you plan to mail ("Ask Anne" column for February 25), if sent by parcel post, special delivery, it will arrive OK and the added cost is small. Have mailed things in morning to upper New York and they arrived there in 24 hours. Also, it took only five days to West Coast.
S. R.

We have just purchased a home which has a 20-gallon hot water heater (gas) with a return of 28 gallons of hot water per hour. My problem is what type of a washing machine (for clothes) I can use, based on this hot water capacity; i. e., automatic, semiautomatic, or wringer type. I intend to do all my laundry at home, but not necessarily all on one day and my family will consist of two adults and two small children. In addition to any statistics and professional information you may be able to give me, I should be interested to know the experiences of persons whose homes have hot water heaters of similar capacity.
F. B. A.

The consensus of opinion among experts in home laundry equipment (at the Department of Agriculture, utilities companies, etc.) is that any of these types of washer will be satisfactory with the 20-gallon heater if you plan your work carefully.

A heater of this size will not give you a very lavish supply of hot water, as you realize. Most households the size of yours, where all laundry is done at home, want a 30 to 50-gallon heater. You will have to wait about an hour after morning baths, dishwashing, etc., to do the laundry. A good deal depends on how high the temperature control is set on your water heater.

The majority of the automatic washers now on the market require 27 to 30 gallons of water (hot and cold) for a complete cycle of washing and rinsing. Ordinarily, this would mean 15 to 18 gallons of hot water. You would therefore have to wait a half hour or longer after washing one load to start on another.

A wringer type washer of average size holds about 17 gallons of water. Of this, about 9 gallons would be hot water under usual circumstances. For two rinse waters in standing tubs (if your laundry room includes such equipment), you would need around 12 or 14 gallons of hot water. This brings the total above that for the automatic washer. However, you would be able to use the various waters over again unless the clothes were too dirty to make this practical. Of course, more work would be involved than with the automatic washer.

You'll naturally want to check the capacity of the different machines you examine, both as to the amount of clothes they wash at a time and the amount of water needed, and make individual comparisons. Some of them now have "water saving" features that may interest you.

If as you say, you don't do all the clothes on one day but scatter out your washings among several days, you should be able to use any of the types satisfactorily. It would be interesting to hear from other readers who have had experiences with washers in conjunction with a hot water heater of the same capacity as the one in your new home.

We would like to purchase a baby spoon and fork set made of stainless steel. Could you tell us whether such sets are being manufactured, and where they can be obtained?
E. G. S.

Since I have not been able to find a store which sells—or ever has sold—these sets in any material but plated silver or sterling, I infer that they are not being made.

Inquiries and contributions to the "Ask Anne" column must be in written form. We regret that time does not permit handling them by telephone. Address letters or cards to Anne, Room 403, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C.

Tricks and Tips for Those Who Wish to Keep Slender

By Ida Jean Kain

Every little bit helps, and many successful losers have hit upon some scheme that has proved of enormous help in reducing.

One overweight, who liked dessert better than all the rest of the meal put together, worked out a plan to break the habit. After she served the family dessert, she poured herself a cup of hot coffee and took it into the living room. There she sipped it leisurely, reading the paper. After finishing the coffee, she had her dessert . . . a peppermint, plain not chocolate. She made it last as long as possible.

The trick is to let it dissolve slowly, not on the tip of the tongue but toward the back, for there it helps to saturate the taste buds. Coffee or tea after a meal is better than during the meal . . . particularly if it takes the place of a high calorie dessert.

Another dieter claims that a plan which really works wonders is to have someone else clear off the table following a meal—otherwise she wants to finish up everything in sight. (And while they are about it, have them stack the dishes neatly, too.)

But back to liquids with meals. Water is not fattening, it has no calories, but drinking too much water or any other liquid with the meal tends to distend the stomach which makes room for more food. Mealtime liquids should be restricted to a total of one glass or cup. That includes coffee, milk, tea or water. Do not drink a glass of water and a beverage.

Sipping ice water throughout the meal encourages overeating. Water is bland and washes off the taste buds and, being cold, stimulates the appetite. Any overweight who has a hard time controlling her appetite should try the plan of not drinking any water within an hour before mealtime or an hour after. But it is important to drink six glasses of water a day, between meals.

Salt also stimulates appetite and encourages thirst. And too much salt tends to hold water in the system. Try using the least salt you like, instead of the most. In general the rule is to let the amount of salt used in cooking suffice. However, in warm climate more salt is needed, since it is lost through perspiration.

Another tip from a dieter: She finds that it's more satisfying to have two thin slices of bread than one regular slice . . . and that by having the butter soft she can spread a half pat over the two slices. Yes, that's slimming.

Does a cigarette help to squelch appetite? That is another frequent query. If you smoke, take a cigarette at the end of the meal . . . it seems to help put a definite period to the meal.

Does standing up after eating help slimming along? Well, standing up to walk away from the table is definitely helpful, but the standing in itself is not a fast streamliner.

If any of you have tricks that have helped, please send them along.

High-Income Families Eat Most Ice Cream

Families on high incomes buy about twice as much ice cream as those on low incomes, according to a survey from North Carolina.

The State Experiment Station there says that families earning less than $200 a month reported buying about 2½ pints of ice cream a week in summer and one pint in winter. But those with incomes over $300 a month purchased more than five pints a week in summer and more than 2½ pints in winter.

Key West Cookbook Suggests Southern Flavor, Tropic Tang

By Lucia Brown

THE LUSH cookery that flourishes in the southernmost point in the United States is featured in "The Key West Cook Book," a sea-blue volume reecntly issued by the Key West Women's Club.

Though it contains some recipes unsuited to produce of our northerly clime — Pawpaw Cocktail, Conch Fritters, and Fried Breadfruit, for example—the majority can be easily made right here in Washington and will add a piquant Southern accent to your menus.

There's Chicken Fricassee, Spanish style, made with tomatoes, almonds and raisins; Key West Banana Pudding, a baked dish made with bananas, eggs, and very little flour; and Avocado Horseshoe Salad which combines raw cauliflowerettes and carrots with the avocado. Coconut, Key limes, and pecans are the stuff with which dreamy pies are made. Then there's a special Shrimp Supreme, mixed like this:

1 pound fresh or frozen shrimp
1 tablespoon minced onion
1 tablespoon minced green pepper
4 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon salt
1 teaspoon chili powder
2 cups milk
4 tablespoons tomato catsup

CLEAN AND CUT shrimp in pieces, Saute onion and pepper in butter until slightly browned. Add shrimp. Stir in flour, salt, and chili powder. Add milk. Continue stirring and cook for 5 minutes. Add catsup and let simmer for 10 minutes. Serve on mounds of fluffy rice, accompanied by a green salad and hot Cuban bread. This recipe serves four.

Sketches of palms, pineapples, fish, Flamenco dancers, and ancient buildings add to the Far South flavor of the cookbook. One of these is of President Truman's "Little White House" at Key West, and on the opposite page is Mrs. Truman's favorite "Ozark Pudding" recipe.

Unusual feature is a section by Key West's masculine cooks. Though they admit in the forword that "a man will memorize one recipe out of the Boy Scout Handbook and cook it up every chance he gets until he makes people think he can cook," the gentlemen seek to disprove this statement with recipes for Curried Lobster, Crawfish Enchilado, Frozen Quinby and other gourmet delicacies.

NEW AID IN taking the drudgery out of housekeeping is "Homemaking Can Be Easy," by Myrtle R. Tolg, (Franklin Watts, Inc.) It's a large slender book, plentifully illustrated. One section is devoted to decorating the home, with sketches showing poor and good arrangements, different kinds of balance, and the differences between modern and traditional furniture. The budget gets a going-over in this book, too, with Miss Tolg giving concrete suggestions on making and balancing it. Other subjects covered include arranging the kitchen, home canning, laundering, housecleaning, storage, raising children and sewing. Miss Tolg is home economist for the National Safety Council.

DESSERTS YOUR WEAKNESS? You'll thoroughly enjoy Louis P. DeGouy's new "Pie Book" (Greenberg). Chef De Gouy, who is well-known as the author of "The Gold Cookbook" and others, has served as a chef in France, Spain, England, at the Casino in Monte Carlo, and on J. P. Morgan's yacht, "The Corsair. He's encountered many a delectable pie along the way and includes recipes for 400 of them in this book. Vicountess Rainbow Chifon Pie and French Walnut Pie are two sweet and fancy ones. At the opposite end of the scale, there's a Carrot Cream Pie from Pennsylvania and a Cheese Custard Pie.

SIMPLY BURSTING with recipes and cooking information is the latest "Enclycopedia of Cookery." It's compiled and published by Wise & Co., Inc., of New York and includes 1300 pages. The material is arranged in easy-to-read column style and there are 673 drawings and 64 color plates. The big book makes an exceptionally handy reference volume for those who wish to have all sorts of information about cooking right at their finger tips.

A Story of Shears and Scissors is a fascinating historical volume recently issued by J. Wiss & Sons Co. The first pair of shears, says the book, originated in the third century B. C. and were invented by Italian shepherds. They were used for shearing sheep, then for trimming myrtle and for cutting the hair of well-appointed nobles of the Emperor's court. These early shears had a bow-spring back with thin, hardened blades working against each other under pressure of the hand. It wasn't until the first century A. D. that cross-bladed shears with a center pivot came into use.

Your Name

I always like to say your name . . . Wherever we may meet . . . At home or at a party or . . . Upon a public street . . . It seems to have an echo soft . . . That lingers in the sky . . . As though it meant a fond hello . . . But never once goodby . . . It rings above the rafters like . . . A lovely organ song . . . To lift me and inspire me . . . And keep my courage strong . . . Your name is something special that . . . I always like to say . . . Because it is the sun that shines . . . When all the clouds are gray . . . It is the magic melody . . . Gravediggers' Wives Appeal To Spellman

New York, March 6 (AP).—Wives of CIO striking gravediggers today appealed to Francis Cardinal Spellmann to end "the present strike breaking atmosphere" at Calvary Cemtery.

At a meeting attended by about 100 women, a committee of 20 was chosen to call on the Catholic prelate to "tell him what we know to be the truth and urge him to a peaceful settlement of the dispute."

Meanwhile, the cardinal's band of seminarians and priests—called strikebreakers by the union—rested after three wearying days of volunteer gravedigging in the strikebound cemetery. The cardinal accompanied the volunteers each day.

Union to Act Tuesday

They were expected to return to their task Monday, preparing graves for an estimated 1000 bodies which have accumulated at the cemetery since the strike began eight weeks ago.

The 240 strikers are members of the CIO Cemetery Workers Union, an affiliate of the Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers Union which the cardinal has called "Communist-dominated." The struck local voted two days ago to quit its parent union. Official action will be taken on the question Tuesday.

In their appeal to the cardinal, the wives of the struck workers adopted a resolution which said in part:

"We know what our men are fighting for—a decent wage for a five-day week. Because of this knowledge and because of our Catholic faith we are deeply aggrieved by the reckless and misguided charges of communism hurled at our loved ones and at the leaders of the union.

Ask Renewed Negotiation

"Therefore we reassert our determination to support our men and their organization, which we knew to be fighting for social justice for the Calvary men, an end which we feel the cardinal and diocesan authorities should hasten by immediately reopening negotiations leading to a new contract."

The union seeks $54.40 for a five-day week, the same pay they received for six days. the cardinal said he had offered an 8 per cent increase over the present scale with no change in the work week.

Cemetery officials said the volunteer workers have dug 260 graves since Thursday.

Russians Avoid Doll Standard In New Look

London, March 6 (AP).—Russian designers have finally reached a compromise with the West. They say they have adopted the New Look while avoiding the "standardized doll" appearance for women.

The Tass News Agency, reporting over Moscow Radio the range of spring and summer fashions at the Moscow of Models, quotes Nadezhda Makarova, the manager as saying:

"Soviet fashion admits of no canon. It adapts itself to taste, build and age. That is why we do not introduce restrictions as to length or line, but endeavor rather to vary our models. We design both short and long, slim and full dresses, in accordance with the wish of the customer, who does not want blindly to follow fashions and distort her figure for the sake of a "modern" gown or by turning herself into a standardized doll.

"The average length of our dresses is 35 centimeters (13½ inches) from the ground—somewhat longer than last year—but sports wear and costumes for work remain as short as before. Evening gowns retain their length and width.

Lifting of Credit Buying Controls In Effect Today

The Nation's business may get a stimulating shot in the arm today, when controls on installment buying will be relaxed a bit.

If you have made up your mind to buy an automobile, regrigerator, radio, television set or similar gadget, you'll have 21 months in which to pay the bill.

The present time limit, fixed by the Federal Reserve Board, is 18 months where the credit amount is over $1000 and 15 months when it is less.

The down payment on items other than automobiles will be 15 per cent, instead of the old 20 per cent.

Petrillo Music Fund Allotment Totals $1,400,212

New York, March 6 (AP).—The AFL American Federation of Musicians has appropriated $1,400,212 42 for its 1949 free public music program throughout this country and Canada, federation president James C. Petrillo said today.

This year's appropriation was described by Petrillo as the third and final allocation from the federation's recording and transcription fund.

Unspeakable Parrot Is Gold-Digging '49er

The bidding is hot and heavy, and he finally winds up buying the bird for $49. It's somewhat steep, but if the parrot is a good talker, he'll be satisfied.

That did it. The parrot also lost its temper and snapped back:

NEAR MISS, MISS

Jane Netboy of 8912 Seneca lne., Bethesda, Md., is 9 years old. Miss Jane considers it her duty to look after the political education of her younger sister, Miss Nancy, who is 5.

The other day, Jane was giving Nancy a bit of a quiz. "Who is our President?" she asked.

"Very good. And who is the Vice President?"

"Alben Broccoli," lisped Nancy.

"Wrong," snapped Jane. "His name is Alben Barley."

STREET SCENE

In the curb lane a U. S. mail truck pulls up to the intersection and stops as the light changes red. Another car pulls up behind the truck, then another—and another.

Unnoticed by the motorists who are in line behind him, the driver of the mail truck leisurely leaves his vehicle and strolls toward a pickup box. He unlocks it, removes the contents, fiddles around with some sorting and arranging.

Meantime the light has changed several times, and the motorists in the stalled line begin to get restive. They can't understand why everybody else is moving but they're not.

But never once does anybody make any move to wave the stalled motorists around the parked truck. They wait there until the truck driver leisurely remounts his iron steed and drives off—at a wild clip that was certainly in excess of the speed limit.

Ridiculous, you say? Certainly. But that's exactly the way it happened.

PERSONAL NOTES

Peggy Lester, 5449 Nebraska ave. nw.: It's a new release. You'll be able to get it at any record shop in a few days.

B. O. J.: Yeah, I've got "nerve enough to print it." But I won't, unless you have nerve enough to sign your letters.

Henrietta Hickerson: The typo on the occasion of President Wilson's wedding was one of those terrible classics that live on through the years. A similar boner was made about the late FDR when he was President. Only 500 copies got out before the presses were stopped, but one of them reached Mr. Roosevelt—and he thought it was uproariously funny.

DRAMA DEPT.: Some of the most dramatic moments in show business take place at 2:30 a. m., at midtown spots where the actors who have just opened in a new play wait up for the critics' notices. One of them finally brings the morning papers, and the cast huddles around him while he reads the reviews aloud . . . John Emery found a way of breaking the bad news quickly, when he opened in 'Wuthering Heights.'" He left his colleagues at Lindy's to go out for the papers. They saw him return, stared at the black marks painted around his eyes and heard him report: "Look what the critics gave us."

Herb Matthews, who has been abroad for the New York Times for many years, may become its chief editorial writer in the fall. . . . Henry Morgan's new radio program starts on NBC March 13. He is abandoning his sponsor-baiting routine . . . A cameraman who took the pictures at the new Crowell-Collier Building cornerstone laying asked one of the photographed men: "Your name?" The man told him: "Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr. I'm the guy who used to live here." The new building was the site of the Vanderbilt home.

HELP WANTED: At the ANTA show next Sunday, Sam Levene and Martin Gabel will do a scene from "Three Men On a Horse" exactly as they did it in the original company. Gabel, now a producer, and Levene of "Light Up the Sky," both studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Art. "I'll show you how to get a job in a play," Leven told Gabel the first day. "I heard that Maurice Schwartz will do an English version of 'Yoshe Kalb.' He's now doing the Yiddish version downtown. We'll talk to him about it" . . . They went to 2d ave., positive that they'd find Schwartz in his dressing room getting into the mood. They finally located Schwartz, in a nearby delicatessen, telling the proprietor: "If you call that good salami, I'll never eat here again" . . . "I don't think he's getting in The Mood," said Gabel, "unless 'Yoshe Kalb' opens with a burp."

Ruhr Eased Back Under Cartel

By Drew Pearson

It's been squeezed off the front pages by other news, but certain things have been transpiring in Germany that may some day affect every United States citizen qualified to carry a gun.

Pearson

The German Ruhr, from which sprang two world wars, is gradually easing back into the control of some of the big German cartelists who built up Hitler's war machine.

Twelve Germans have just been nominated to control the Ruhr steel industry, despite the bitter protests of German labor unions and the liberal political parties now struggling against German communism.

The man who selected the Ruhr cartelists—Dr. Herman Puender—is, himself, interesting. When Hitler first threatened to come into power, Puender was an adviser to Chancellor Bruening, the last democratic leader of Germany, and wrote a confidential memo advising Bruening not to oppose Hitler too vigorously.

After the war started, Puender served as lieutenant-colonel in Div. III, H., Abwehr of OKH, which made him the German equivalent of a Soviet political commissar. For the Abwehr was in charge of "morale and ideology" and had the job of suppressing Anglo-American propaganda in the Nazi ground forces.

It is this one-time trusted servant of Adolf Hitler who has now been permitted to choose the German steel barons who are to govern the vital industry of the Ruhr.

U. S. Steel in Ruhr

The man who helped set up this plan, Undersecretary of the Army William Draper, was a member of the Wall Street firm of Dillon, Read, which loaned millions to this very same German steel industry prior to World War II. Without these millions, Hitler probably could not have started war when he did.

Draper has now departed the Washington scene to rejoin Dillon, Read. And his banking partner, James Forrestal, who also helped loan money to the steel cartels, is on his way out as Secretary of National Defense.

These men justify the juggernaut they leave behind to govern the Ruhr on the ground that a committee of Allied steel moguls will supervise the 12 German cartelists.

However, let's take a careful look at this committee. The American members are: William J. Brinkerhoff, Werner P. Neumann, Ronald Clark and Ian F. L. Elliot, all of the U. S. Steel Corp., together with Frederick M. Dillies of Inland Steel.

To get the full background, you have to look at the files of the Justice Department regarding U. S. Steel's secret conversations with the Nazis prior to the war. Especially important is one of the gentlemen on the above Ruhr committee, Ian F. L. Elliott.

For the U. S. Steel Corp. and other big American steel companies were playing hand-in-glove with the European steel cartel, including the Nazis, prior to the war, and Mr. Elliot was the chief go-between in organizing the deal.

Secret Steel Deal

All this remained secret until the United States Army got into Luxembourg and took over the files of the steel cartel. At that time the Justice Department got its first good look at what the barons of the American steel industry had been doing with the Nazis right up to the war. A total of 4000 documents were seized, showing that during 1938-39 various secret meetings were held in London, Paris and Luxembourg to organize a world steel cartel.

The American representatives for this deal were none other than Tom Girdler of Republic Steel, who has had a virtual pipeline in to Harry Truman through Truman's close friend, George Allen; Eugene Grace of Bethlehem Steel, and Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel, the company which now supplies four of the men supposed to keep an eye on the Ruhr.

The European manager for the U. S. Steel Corp. and the chief go-between for both the British and the Americans was Ian Elliott, who now sits on the board of governors for the Ruhr.

During the dates when this deal was organized—1938-39—Hitler had already marched into Czechoslovakia and was greedily eyeing Poland. American correspondents in Europe were constantly warning of war, and this columnist had categorically predicted it.

Feared Justice Department

Despite this, the biggest leaders of American steel worked out a deal whereby they would not compete with Germany, though they admitted they could not control "little steel" in this country. Significantly, also, they refused to sign a written cartel agreement on the ground that they might incur Justice Department prosecution. Instead, they entered a "gentleman's" oral agreement which they said would be just as binding as a written contract.

Today, therefore, control of Ruhr steel, the key to war in Europe, will be under 12 German cartelists picked by a former Nazi officer, and under the supervision of four United States steel men whose boss made a secret deal with the Nazis even while Hitler was waving the big stick over Czechoslovakia and Poland.

Capital Chaff

The Hungarian government is going after other religious groups besides the Catholics. The Hungarians have cut off Jewish emigration out of Hungary and closed down the offices of Jewish relief agencies in Budapest... The State Department has just received an encouraging report on the French political situation. Both the Communists and General de Gaulle are losing strength. The French middle-of-the-road group is steadily picking up influence—a great victory for democracy.

Number 6 in a Series... Hecht Co. Personalities in the News

"A big store is like a big family," says Vi, "and my job is to keep peace and harmony in the family. With so many of us working closely together, there's bound to be a difference of opinion now and then. After all, we are only human . . . all 3,500 of us. And being human we're not immune to the everyday trials and tribulations confronting mortals. That goes for problems arising inside the store as well as out. For example, if Jane, usually an alert, courteous salesperson, is finding it rough going at home, it's quite possible she isn't concentrating on her customers. Her worries seem to be written all over her face. The counseling service steps in and helps Jane iron things out. By doing so the counseling service helps you, a Hecht Co. customer, to faster, more courteous service. I hope I'm not giving you the impression that I spend 8 hours a day being the Mrs. Anthony of The Hecht Co. Although I do hand out an occasional crying towel," says Vi, "The Hecht Co. is fortunate in being a pretty happy family on the whole. And, our counseling service tries to keep it that way with gifts to associates having birthdays . . . weddings . . . babies . . . as well as taking care of sick leave pay, pensions, bonuses and all the other benefits prescribed by store policy. The doors to the counseling service offices are never closed," says Vi. "And it's a comforting thought to the 3,500 Hecht Co. associates to know that there's always someone here to help them, whether it's lending a sympathetic ear to Mary . . . or letting Bill get it off his chest . . . or actually going to bat for Suzy, and seeing that she gets her transfer to the clerical job she's been after. How does our counseling service affect you, a Hecht Co. patron? I'd say there is a direct tie-up with that smile you receive from Jane while she is helping you choose your purchase. I'd say that it makes The Hecht Co. a great place to work . . . a great place to shop. After all," says Vi, "we're only human."

VI SUTTON was born in Pennsylvania and is an ex-Philadelphia school teacher. Perhaps it was the proximity of the Liberty Bell which imbued her with her great love for people. Vi has been with The Hecht Co. for 20 years, 18 of which she spent in the Advertising Department. She took over the welfare and counseling services 2 years ago and she and her 2 assistants have been spreading good cheer and sunshine ever since. Vi is also the editor of The Hecht Co. associates' weekly paper, "The Hecht Tick."
